This Week's staff was out in full force last Wednesday to treat the public to habachi-grilled hot dogs and a giant submarine sandwich at Civic Square in Oshawa as part of the Fanfare festivities. Mayor Jim Potticary, a number of council members, city hall staff, a band playing in the square and the general public devoured 300 hot dogs and the sandwich in just over half an hour. Here, Editor Tom Douglas helps staffer Sandy Wragg take a bite out of the sandwich, which was donated by the Oshawa Bakery and Captain Submarine.

Monday is Father's Night at Mother's
When a father can feed his family for as little as $2.49
Every Monday evening from 4 'till 9 p.m., it's Father's Night at Mother's. When every father can afford to treat his family to their favorite pizza at their favorite place
For just $2.49, Mother will prepare a perfect eight slice pizza. Then cover it with your choice of three items from Mother's menu. And, for the same $2.49, Mother will include a big, frosty jug of coke, gingerale, root beer or orange
If your family is famished or if you've invited along a few friends, then order two of Mother's Monday night specials and spend less than five dollars.
Monday, Father's Night at Mother's. A night when a dad can feed his family more, for less.

More than just a place to eat

Everything from honest-to-goodness antiques to second-hand skates at the Friendly Flea

By Linda Sutton
Staff Writer

"In the old days they made rocking chairs big enough to take a heavy man," says the owner of the Friendly Flea

Ken Leard is a heavy many himself and he likes the comfortable, friendly feeling that antiques give

The Friendly Flea is a flea market on King Street West just next to ths Lancaster Hotel and it's a great place for browsing around

Leard and his wife Alice run the store crammed with antiques, junk and used furniture in a comfortable relaxed style

They've been in the business for more than 15 years and have recently moved to their King Street location from an old store on Prince Street that's now been torn down

Leard is obviously a man who likes what he's doing, people and bargaining with his customers

Everything from the very scarce brass bedsteads to secondhand shoes and hospital paperbacks are sold at the Friendly Flea

Leard promotes antiques as an investment

A young couple starting out could spend $2,000 on furniture, he says They could buy all new stuff and two years later they'd be lucky to sell it for one-sixth of the price they paid But if they bought antiques, they'd easily double their money in two years

A pine table and four chicken back chairs would cost about the same price as a cheap crome set, he says, about$200

"That's a good investment for a young couple"

Leard displays right up front in the store three brass bedsteads that are going for about $600 They are getting so scarce right now, he says, that they have gone up in price 1000 per cent in the last two years

The Leards are proud of their collection of Limoges and of their reasonable prices for these items One hand-painted Limoges vase, signed by Limoges himself, sells for about $150

Cranberry glass is a favorite with collectors and the Friendly Flea has some attractive originals and some excellent modern reproductions. If you're looking for pieces to round out your grandmother's set, you may just find them here

Sitting next to these fragile items is a cigar store wooden Indian that came from Quebec and a muzzle-loader fur traders used to cheat the Indians

Crammed in with oak dining sets, carved wooden cradest, near-complete sets of old Wedgewood and rocking chairs are second hand stoves, fridges, hot plates, second-hand 'contemporary cheap' sofas used shoes, and just about any kind of junk imaginable.

Ken Leard, owner of Oshawa's Friendly Flea Market, relaxes amidst some of the articles he has for sale at his shop.

"We sell everything, says Mrs Leard

They sell second hand skates in the winter for $3 a pair and used pots and pans for the cottage

Old paintings are hung on the walls of the lower floor and Leard talks about letting young Oshawa artists display their works in the just-as-crammed upstairs

"We like antiques because they're friendly he says

They get everyone from serious antique collectors to people who are just browsing and looking for unusual and inexpensive gifts coming into the shop

One time, Leard remembers, he sold a lady a print for $6 and she took it into Toronto and got $500 for it

He gets his stuff from all over and people come into the store to sell him individual items The Leards have a collection of jewelry and diamonds for sale

Most of the antiques are Canadiana although much of the glass and china is English

Some unusual pieces - a bronze-handled ice-box that sells for $350; an oxen yoke that Leard says would make an interesting chandelier, a set of apple-wood cabinet-making tools clocks dating back to the early 18th century: a bird-seye maple silver chest; a high, long old accountant's desk, ruby-cut stained glass windows from the Drew home on King Street East demolished just a few months back, one of the few surviving McLaughlin 1908 cutters; a solid pine child's rocker with a hole in the seat

He is perhaps most fond of a personal find that is more than years old. He keeps a gold Egyptian coin minted around 200 B.C carefully wrapped in paper and Kleenex in his wallet That is one of the few things in the store not for sale

The Friendly Flea's owners like to think they cater to people of all ages and tastes and have a real interest in the people who come into the store and in the things they sell

There's a market for everything," says Leard

The only thing we don't have..' says Mrs Leard, "is fleas

Action at the games

Top-calibre competition was the name of the game amongst the 1,200 athletes who participated in the first Ontario Summer Games held in Oshawa over the Dominion Day weekend. More than 30,000 spectators showed up to watch the various events, which included tennis, high jumping, bicycling, shot-putting and hurdle races. Those in attendance praised the organizers of the the events for the split-second timing in which the various categories were run. The top 45 participants will participate in the Canada Games to be held in British Columbia in August

Reynen was a bit squeamish at first, now enjoys his job

By John Bell
Staff Writer

When Bert Reynen was offered his new job he accepted on the basis that if he didn't like it he d get his old one back

This, he says, was understandable considering that he's the new superintendant of Union Cemetery in Oshawa

"When I was offered the job", he says, "I hesitated I figured what do I do in a cemetery? I get pale in a funeral home let alone working in a cemetery"

That was on April 24 Now nearly three months later Reynen has changed his whole outlook on working at the cemetery and he now really enjoys it

By this time too, he's found out exactly what has to be done to operate and maintain a cemetery as large as Union which covers 30 acres

Maintaining the grounds is a continuous task for the four-man crew under Reynen taking in everything from supervision and care of each and every plot, to cutting the acres of lawn as well as the actual burials themselves

Occasionally he receives complaints from people who have visited graves of friends or relatives over the weekend about the headstone being crooked or the grave having sunk

These two occurances he says are common, especially after the frost is out of the ground in the spring and are remedied as soon as possible

The problem he doesn t like dealing with is vandalism There s quite a lot of vandalism at Union, he says, as in the case where someone removed nine statuettes from headstones with a chisel and hammer

Often he says young people come into the cemetery at night and switch the temporary markers on graves This was becoming a problem from the point of remembering which marker went where but Reynen caught on to the trick and started keeping a record of the temporary markers and their location

He says it's sad that anyone should want to do such a thing, especially in the burial area for children

Since the first interrment back in 1830's, the cemetery has seen a lot of change mainly in the form of expansion and extensive landscaping to the point where now, Reynen says he receives a lot of compliments on how well it's taken care of

The problem now faced by the cemetery, he says, is that it's been expanded as far as possible He anticipates that in another three years it will have reached capacity

Interrment procedures haven't changed over the years Graves are still dug and filled by the maintenance crew On occasion if more than two funerals have been arranged for the same day, Reynen will call in a man with a 'digger' or back-hoe

He says there is no way the crew can handle more than two funerals per day since it takes two men about three hours to properly dig and prepare a grave

The price of a lot too has changed since the cemetery first opened Reynen says that back in 1924 a plot sold for $5 whereas today it sells for $90, this including perpetual care

Staff photographer Duncan Anderson finds himself in some offbeat positions at times. Those are his feet pointed up at Al Landers.

Students learning to handle their drugs

By Linda Sutton
Staff Writer

Teenagers are getting more sophisticated in their drug use, according to Ontario County Board of Education's drug expert.

Bill Smith, administrative assistant for drug and education counselling, reports the drug situation in Ontario County Schools has stabilized in the last year or two.

"No longer," he says, do teachers and school officials see the freaked-out kid in the classroom.

Mind-altering drugs are still around, Smith points out.

"But what is being used, the kids are able to handle."

Booze and pot are still number one and number two in popularity with teenagers, he says, adding there appears to be little trouble with teenagers coming into school with hangovers, or missing school altogether.

Most students who use drugs restrict their use to weekends, starting Friday nights to be sober by Monday morning, he says.

"But we still have the experimenters and the regular users."

Many will experiment once or twice with a variety of drugs, says Smith, and this often comes as a result of a dare.

The regular users, particularly of LSD, MDA, cocaine, and speed, almost invariably have other hang-ups, he says.

"The panic situation is gone. Both the parents and the kids know more about drugs now and about the pattern of drug use."

Many parents tacitly tolerate their children using pot as long as they don't get into any trouble, says Smith.

Smith forcefully rejects the conjecture that use of marijuana leads to hard drug use.

"Everyone starts out on formula milk or mother's milk but that doesn't invariably lead to booze. The same with pot."

Drug use is no longer a taboo subject in most families, he says, and parents and children are taking about it.

A growing problem now, Smith says, is venereal disease. That's still a hush-hush subject, he says, and a lot of kids and even adults don't know how they get it or how it affects them.

A lot of Smith's work is counselling but in his work with teenagers he's seeing less regular hard drug use. But he is working with increasing numbers of young people with other problems.

Frequently teachers refer students to him whom they think have drug problems but who really have other emotional problems, says Smith.

Since being assigned to drug education and counselling in 1968, he says, the drug scene has changed considerably.

CLOCA conservation areas save land

By John Bell
Staff Writer

The Harmony Valley Conservation Area is a fun place

So what's the Harmony Valley Conservation Area? That question is a problem Dave Smith is trying his best to overcome with the help of the public

Smith, supervisor of conservation services for the Central Lake Ontario Conservation Authority says Harmony Valley park, a 70-acre site located just north of Rossland Road, east of Harmony Road, has all facilities for picnicking, hiking and bicycling, and is ideally located for Oshawa residents, but very few people know it's there, and the few that do rarely use it

The Harmony Valley park is one of four conservation areas under the jurisdiction of the conservation authority (CLOCA) which are designed to provide passive and active recreation for the people of the area

The authority also operated the Heber Down Conservation area located just west of the Village of Brooklin. This 450-acre site can be reached by taking Highway 7 to Coronation Road and heading south

There are now only 65 acres open for use at the Heber Down site, but Smith says work is progressing on the remaining lands to provide facilities for camping

The third site is the Enniskillen Conservation area Smith says the best way to get there is to follow Taunton Road east to Celina Road, turn north then east on the seventh concession There are signs directing people to the park from there

This park like Harmony Valley, is a 70-acre wooded and open area, complete with picnic tables, duck pond and, says Smith, a nice quiet atmosphere

For those who enjoy the more rugged outdoor setting, the authority has a 200-acre park located north-east of the Village of Tyrone This park, says Smith is divided into two sections a 100-acre open section for picnicking or walking and the northern half which runs into the Oak Ridges Moraine From this point on a clear day the hiker can see for miles around

The Harmony Valley Conservation Area is a terrific place for a picnic because few people realize it's open to the public.

To get to this park follow the new Scugog Road north from Bowmanville to the ninth concession From there it's amatter of following the signs east

The authority does have another area in Whitby, but this is not available to the public because it's a wildlife sanctuary. The area, known as the Cranberry Marsh, says Smith, is one of the key wildlife sanctuaries along Lake Ontario

With the exception of the marsh, all other authority parks are open to the public seven days a week, and so far, there is no charge for using the facilities, but next year this may change according to Smith

As he sees it, the advantage to the public in using authority parks is the peace and quiet, and the fact there are no fences, gates, no-tresspassing signs or private property signs

And all the areas are creek valley lands which if not under authority jurisdiction may well have been built on, so that there would be a lack of public open space in the area

In its future plans, the authority is hoping to develop another conservation park along the Oshawa Creek north of Taunton Road This would take in much of the area behind Durham College

Before any extensive program of acquiring and developing lands is begun Smith says the authority has realized the need for comprehensive planning

We're just now starting to tackle the problem of planning he says Let's have a plan instead of the ad hoc buying of land. We must start out with a user-need study and an inventory of what we have

The authority has grown up, he says, making the need for sound planning important Before action is taken, information must be obtained on where conservation areas are needed how much land is available and where lands are endangered by urbanization which should be bought by the authority

Blood blitz

One thousand units is the target of the Oshawa Kinsmen Club in their annual blood blitz to be held at St. Gregory's Auditorium Thursday from 1 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Last year, the club set a record by collecting 798 pints of blood and they are out to better it in Thursday's campaign

Coulter may not run for mayor

Family considerations may prevent Controller Graham Coulter from seeking the office of the Mayor of Oshawa in the regional elections this fall.

Graham Coulter

Coulter told This Week he has been asked by a number of people to run for the mayor's job, but says he wants to think it over for another month.

He admits he would like to serve the municipality in this way, but says he has to consider his responsibility to his 14-year-old daughter. Mrs. Coulter died recently.

"My daughter comes first," says Coulter.

The chief magistrate of the city will have to spend most of his time at his job, he says, and he is not sure that his family duties will allow him to spend that kind of time.

MIRACLE FOOD MART... DISCOUNT PRICES WORTH GOING OUT OF YOUR WAY FOR

MEMO FROM HELEN GAGEN

Consumer Advisor
c/o Miracle Food Mart

Rexdale Ont.

FISH CAN STILL BE THRIFTY

Fish has have gone up, there's no denying it. But there's still lots of delicious economic eating that you're missing if you omit fish from your diet.

Smoked fish is cheaper, are wonderful on toast, tossed with lemon or dill flavored butter or mayonnaise. Do pan fry or deep fry them if you are not on a low cholesterol diet.

Try tuna in lieu in any way that you would cook cod or haddock. Thought different in texture and flavor you'll find them a delightful change and easy on the budget.

Stock frozen and frozen red snapper have their devotees and have one as well as the fish to offer to family meals.

If you're back in for convenience plus economy remember that you can get both from frozen fish sticks and frozen fish cakes and for a special treat get a reasonable price try frozen rainbow trout.

Every meal is a new issue to be met to serve fish two or three times each week. It can be not only delicious and economical but it's high in food values and low in calories and fats as well.

Land banks

There are as many arguments for as against

By Garnet Cowsill
Staff Writer

Buy a $35,000 home Put $10 000 down By the time you finish paying the mortgage at current rates it will cost you $110,000 according to the federal Conservative Party

"If the cost of mortgage money has been the largest single factor in rising housing costs, there is no question that the cost of land has been the second most important factor," says another report the one from the federal task force on housing and urban development

Land in many cases accounts for up to 50 percent of the overall price of a house.. it has become the number one problem," it continues.

We have already established in an earlier article that there is a housing crisis in Oshawa, due not to a shortage of accommodations but because the price of shelter is financially out of reach of the average citizen

So what can be done?

Many senior government and local officials say land banking is the only answer

It is a relatively simple process The province or a municipality buys large tracts of land and banks it while it is being planned Then it services the land engages a builder to put houses on it and sells it at cost or a price a little above cost to offset interest and servicing costs

"I don't believe in public ownership of 100 per cent of the land" says Peter Hammer city planning director But I do think the municipality should own enough land to bring about an equalization of land prices in the private sector

Hammer maintains that land banking would curtail land speculation which he says is the major factor in increased land cost when ultimately affect the total house package cost

If the city started a land bank the threat of cheaper land flooding the market would force the private sector to bring down its land prices in order to remain competitive he says

"We have definition gut to get into land banking to regulate the private market" Hammer says With regional government a concerted effort should be put on the provincial and federal governments to consider land banking in Oshawa

Mayor Jim Potticary has a similar view

"The major problem is the cost of land due to land speculation and the guy that pays the least tax to pay he sits We've got to tie down next year and second look at it

There have been provisions in the National Housing Act for municipalities to borrow federal funds for land banking since 1949. But both the provincial and federal governments, it seems, have avoided making actual commitments

In 1972, amendments to the Act that would have strengthened the possibility of land banking were not passed because of the intervention of the national election

Before that in 1970 former provincial treasurer Darcy McKeough set aside $20 million to establish the Ontario Land Acquisition Corporation

For some reason, however, it was never set up and, according to a Bureau of Municipal Research report, "no more detailed policy statements on land

by garnet cowsill

banking have been issued

Land banking would not only lower housing costs it would also ensure good integrated community planning and it would generate public revenue that could either be used to buy more land or reduce property taxes

The present planning techniques are basically negative says Hammer

Under land banking we could determine the planning goal to development We could look at the need of land and say this is for schools this is for parks this is for transportation and utilities and this is for easements

If the type of planning were consistent he says it would greatly benefit the public in the long run

If the public were able to sell land at the private market value the profit could be used to provide parks cultural structures or roads or perhaps be funnelled into decreasing taxes he says

So why is land banking so long in coming from the senior government levels?

Because the public is afraid of it

Our society is built upon private property says a Bureau of Municipal Research report In considering changes in the laws of property ownership land the last capital is sacred

There are four all factors which encourage land ownership in the past have contributed to many of our attitudes towards land ownership and control today the report says Many still believe that land and property ownership are important guarantees of individual freedom and that ownership is something that should be pursued in itself

"The private sector offers the argument that the public sector should offer only its traditional supportive role in free enterprise" Hammer says But when the cost of land continues to increase because of a lack of public action then the freemarket principle just doesn't work

Land banking has worked effectively in other places, Hammer says which proves that it is a practical theory and not just 'book planning' as some developers say

In Sweden land banking has reportedly worked well since 1904 In Saskatoon, a city not unlike Oshawa with a population of 130 000 it has been successful for more than 20 years The same is happening in Alberta cities

The average lot in these places is selling for between $1 600 and $5 500 In Oshawa, lots sell for between $16 000 and $22 000

But it seems the public is still afraid of land banking as a socialistic theory designed to take away the basic right of private ownership

Added to this it is reasonable to assume that the governments have received pressure from the private land developing sector

There are as many arguments against land banking as there are for

According to a report from the Urban Development Institute an association of developers land banking is unnecessary and even restrictive in that the government need only make more serviced land available in order to lower land prices

If supply is greater than demand it is argued then the price will be lower

A second more philosophical argument that relates to the right of private ownership is this is not the proper role for government to adopt

It would not only cost too much for the initial investment to buy the land developers argue but it would also reduce local revenues because public owned land is not taxed

The UDI also says that developing is a business and the government is inefficient to manage the business

One thing is certain government should decide policies on the matter one way or another so those facing the housing crisis can at least begin to plan

sportsweek

Terry Kelly is not a forgotten man

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

Fanfare was an outstanding success story for the city of Oshawa and Ontario sports in general.

Certainly one of the driving forces behind the gala week was Terrance V. Kelly, the local barrister who did an outstanding job towards getting the games here.

As most fans realize, Terry was forced to quit the games just prior to their staging as his doctors Shaw (no relation) and Giroux put a complete stop to the human working machine.

Kelly who has organized so many things for Oshawa never seems to know when to quit. For him, it's only one way and that's straight ahead.

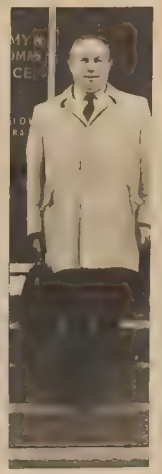
Kelly of course helped erect the Civic Auditorium in the 40-cent-a-week drive over three years, was directly involved in the swimming pool and recreation complex and the civic fields.

An ardent sports buff, Kelly doesn't stop there. For years he has been the campaign manager behind the Red Feather drive.

We talked to Terry a few days ago and he echoed praise for Wendall Brewster and his entire staff at the recreation department for a "job well done".

"Heck, this isn't a one-man show," said Kelly. "Everybody played a key part in making it go."

Despite his modest remarks, we all realize that the Kelly band wagon in completing his ideas.



Oshawa lawyer Terry Kelly spearheaded plans for Fanfare For Oshawa Week before he was taken ill.

Kelly is the type of individual who gets thingsdone and done right.

He has that uncanny knack of surrounding himself with responsible people who before too long join on

Sure lawyer Kelly has had some mishaps like us all, but it is disappointing to him personally not being able to take an active roll in the games during Fanfare week itself.

Earlier in the day it was announced that the Green Gaels had finally received word of who they were going to pay in the coveted Minto Cup in Oshawa.

"Get down here right away, Jim, " Kelly yelled. "We've got a job to do before midnight tonight".

When I arrived, Terry said: "Here you write the program and I'll get the sponsors and he had me so generated with enthusiasm to get the job done, we were all completed by 10 p.m. and the programs were available for the fans printed just one hour prior to game time the following day.

At present, Terry is resting at home just taking it easy listening to the ball games on the radio.

"I know every station on the radio where I can listen to major league ball," said Kelly, "but come next week I'll be back in harness again and raring to go".

Certainly Oshawa can be proud of Terry Kelly for his outstanding community service to Oshawa and the area for an outstanding job and despite being confined to his household we're looking forward to seeing Terry back on the job.

He's a good one.

John Donaghey of Cobourg comes in for a perfect two-point landing during the boys' triple jump at the Ontario Summer Games in Oshawa during the Dominion Day weekend.

Arlene Keatley of Courtice (below) will go on to British Columbia for the Canada Games as a result of winning the girls' 200-metre hurdles during the Ontario Summer Games in Oshawa this past weekend. The 60-mile bicycle race (above), held Sunday morning, ran smoothly, thanks in part to the supervision of the Oshawa police department.

YWCA project

Popular day camp has one session filled already, but others still available

The long hot summer can become a time of loneliness and boredom for some children with nothing to do all day

A needed break is available though to children and their parents who do have something to do all day by registering for a week at the YWCA Day Camp 159 Centre St Oshawa

The children meet new friends at day camp and learn new activities like archery says Barbara Hiemstra program director of the Y

She says the learning experiences also include nature trips to Camp Samac where the children spend a day during their camp stay

The success and popularity of the day camp has proven itself over the years with more camp sessions added and this year the first of four sessions (July 9 to July 13) has already been filled by 106 eager campers

Mrs Hiemstra says the camp director assistant director and counsellors have all been hired for the summer and are preparing the many crafts and activities for the campers ages six to 12

The senior counsellors are 16 to 18 and every group of campers which is made up of about 10 or 12 in the same age bracket has both a senior and junior counsellor she says

"A lot of our counsellors started as campers themselves volunteering as junior counsellors and then when they became old enough and experienced were hired as senior counsellors

The day camp begins with the session already filled on July 3 ending July 13 the second one will be held from July 23 to July 27 the third from July 30 to August 3 and the last from August 13 to August 17

Beginning at 9.30 a m "sharp" and ending each day at 3:30 p.m , the children enjoy indoor and outdoor programs of gym swimming, crafts and films

As for providing care for children of working mothers, Mrs. Hiemstra says the day camp is glad to have all children but enrollment in all the sessions may not be fair to the child

"The activities are repeated in each session and perhaps by the last camp, the child will not be as interested she says

New relationships the children develope with fellow campers and the counsellors is very important and she says the camp enables the children to relate to people other than mother or teacher

Registration for the three camps not filled yet can now be taken at the Y' building on Centre Street during the week from 9 a m to 5 p m Fees are $10 for one child $16 for two and $20 per family

"I'm sure the people of Oshawa will support the productions this project puts on , he says Our resident company had a four-show season last winter and worked at a profit of more than $4,000

The summer season for the OFY group will include three musicals and two plays Although the plays have not yet been selected the musical productions are the The Sound of Music The King and I and Guys and Dolls which will open the festival season July 18

Judo demonstrations were part of the entertainment at Civic Fields following the parade that kicked off Fanfare Week in Oshawa.

Why can't my son play lacrosse? ask parents

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

Walt and Marg Sawyer are avid lacrosse fans and have been now for the past nine years.

The main reason is their 13-year old son Dale is a great little player with the Garrard Minor setup This year Dale who will be entering high-school this fall after being voted the top athlete in his public school, wants to play lacrosse in the Whitby Minor program

However he has been denied the right to do so by the Garrard Minor system and the parent Ontario Minor Lacrosse Association

Young Dale who has been playing lacrosse since the ripe old age of four sought his release from the Garrard Road association earlier in the spring and was turned down by president Bill Holding and his executive

According to his mother the reason he wants to join the Whitby Association is that the majority of kids he played with in pee-wee hockey are playing in Whitby lacrosse this summer

She explained that they are residents of Whitby and she felt that her own son should not be denied this opportunity. They requested a meeting with the Ontario Minor Lacrosse Association on May 29 and were granted a release however the Garrard Road Association appealed this decision and then requested that young Dale and his father re-appear before the association

Both parents have been members of the Garrard setup, but are no longer associated with this group

When they reappeared the OMLA re-considered their original decision and said that young Dale must play for only the Garrard Road setup

Oshawa hockey school shows a lot of promise

By Jim Shaw

Summer hockey schools are a great way for a youngster to improve himself for one of the most popular sports-in-the world today

Actually the summer school were pioneered by Dick Gamble, a native of Oshawa, for years at the Bowmanville Arena. Since those days almost every pro player has been involved in a hockey school in Canada, the U.S.A. and Europe.

Oshawa has had schools before and this year four former members of the Oshawa Generals have joined together to bring a school into the city.

Jack Lynch, Hank Nowak, Steve Cardwell and Teddy McComb are the ex-Gens involved with the school and they have added two seasoned professionals in Hugh Harvey and Larry Bignell

It all gets underway at Harman Park Arena on July 30 and runs for four consecutive weeks. Sessions are scheduled the weeks of July 30, August 6, August 13 and August 20.

This school offers the convenience of having a place at home where the youngster can return to their own homes each day

It has personalized instruction with the main purpose to help the youngster as individuals rather than the group

The fundamentals will include stick handling shooting and most important positional play and skating development. Weekly scrimmages are also on the format with lectures and chalk talk instruction which is an important part of the game.

The youngsters will be receiving trophies for the outstanding progress and a crest for every individual

Each day the school will last four hours with two sessions for different age groups whereby a young skater will be playing at his own level

As you can see the school has a professional for every position Weekly fee is $60 and for two consecutive weeks it's $110

A $20 deposit is required and all cheques should be mailed to Box 383 in Whitby

Runners brought greetings

Eight members of Canada's masters international track team, four from Toronto and four from Oshawa, ran a 33.3 mile relay from the City Hall in Toronto to Oshawa as part of Fanfare For Oshawa week

It helped mark the start of Oshawa hosting the first Ontario games. The runners relayed a message to Oshawa Mayor Jim Potticary from Mayor David Crombie of Toronto

Members of the relay squad with their ages in brackets ran with the following times. John Young(54) ran 3.5 miles in 28 25, Elwyn Davies (42) 4.5 miles in 30 43 Bill Allen (41) 5.4 miles in 30 4 Don Farquharson (48), 4.9 miles in 33.38 Don Stiles (54) 4 miles in 26 22 Ron Belton (40) 4.16 miles in 31 21 Paul Belliveau (46) 4.6 miles in 34 05 and Roy Barrand Oshawa city clerk 1.4 miles in 14 26 They covered the 33.3 miles in a total time of 3 hours 51 minutes and 42 seconds

Sherry Bassin chosen new mentor of Cats

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

Joe Wilks president of the Pickering Panthers Junior B hockey club announced this morning that Sherry Bassin has been hired as the new coach for the 1973-74 Metro Junior B league season

Bassin replaces Bob Duncan who quit the Cats late last season over a player dispute Bassin comes from the Wexford Jr B club where he coached last year and has a different approach towards the game than most mentors

Originally from Regina he attended University in North Carlina and is currently teaching law at Durham College in Oshawa

Bassin will join Brad Gordon a former Wexford executive who signed on last week with Pickering as the club s new general manager

Bassin formerly played college and junior hockey in Saskatchewan and has coached minor teams in Toronto including a Metro City bantam championship team and an All Ontario midget winner

He is currently a scout for various OSA colleges and has sent 17 players to the States on scholarships during the past three years

A strict disciplinarian Bassin also operates a hockey school in Chicago during the summer and is the only school in Chicago which is full to capacity despite opposition from the Dennis Hull and Pat Stapleton school

Both Hull and Stapleton are members of the Chicago Black Hawks

Bassin is known to forces his players to write an exam prior to the first league game on the fundamentals of the game and positional play to show the knowledge they gained at training camp

If a player doesn t receive a perfect paper he doesn t make the club said Bassin

Whitby Tiremen had bad night

The Whitby Tiremen took it on the chin last Tuesday night and by 14-1 count at the hands of the powerful R & H Cabinet Makers

It was a four-point game and would have been a big one for the Canadian Tire Service Department lads to win

Whitby had two bad innings as they gave up four runs in the fourth inning and another five in the sixth Oshawa scored singles in the third and fifth innings

Reg White went the distance for R & H, allowing five hits and he claimed an even dozen batters via the strikeout routine

The lone Tireman run came in the bottom of the second as Stu Higham and Ronnie Moore singled followed by a sacrifice fly by Jim Closs From there on the runners were very scarce for Whitby as they never had a man past first base in the final seven innings

Walt Gordon was the big gunner for the winners as he had three of the 12 hits picked up by the Oshawa entry John Pipher had a pair of safeties

Gord Wilson tripled with two out in the first but was left stranded Lloyd Mapes drove in a couple of runs in the fourth with a double

Bob Collins of R. S. McLaughlin Collegiate in Oshawa ran fourth in the semi-finals of the boys' 100 metre dash at the Ontario Summer Games in Oshawa this past weekend.

Koke scored upon

It has taken eight games but finally it happened Koke Car Wash members of the Whitby Soccer Association squirt league finally were scored upon

Koke riding a brilliant seven win one tie record were held to a 1-1 draw as second place Randall Plumbers earned the sawoff

Garry Roberts was the youngster who booted home a goal against Marty Berryman

Coach Hank Hoogkamp realized that sooner or later his team would be scored against and it happend Earlier in the week Koke blasted Canada Tire 7-1 with Dave Craig and Paul Hoogkamp scoring three goals apiece

Brooklin Concretes whipped White Insurance 7-2 with Tom Scheffer and John Schell scoring three goals apiece Randall Plumbers blanked Wilson Sports

Meet Jeff Mason of the Gaels

Three-year veteran Jeff Mason of the Oshawa Green Gaels is enjoying his most productive season in his Junior A lacrosse history

The stocky 19-year-old who stands 5 foot 10 inches and weighs in at a solid 185 pounds is one the shining lights of the Gaels this point season

He considers the Gaels just haven t got the desire this season as in earlier campaigns to be a winner With two more years remaining for junior eligibility Mason is seriously considering quitting after this season

It s just too much to work at a summer job and practice or play lacrosse five days a week I guess I don t get any kicks from it any more explained Mason

If I was getting paid it would probably be an entirely different story altogether It seems a lot of the players don t really want to work for the club and the great Gaels tradition of the winning spirit just isn t there any longer

A student at McLaughlin Collegiate, Mason was first introduced to the game by Gaylord Powless a long time standout with the Gaels

Gaylord used to board next door to us when we where youngsters and he taught me a lot about the game especially shooting and carrying the ball

Mason s biggest ambition in life is to enjoy it and he thinks that lacrosse ha helped him fulfill this desire at least until this year

Changing morals are not only ruining society, they're ruining Harry

Barbering will never die, it's just in a terribly bad slump right now, says Oshawa barber Harry Ross.

"When people start to think again, it may come back" says the 35-year veteran hair-cutter

Barbering as a profession and a lucrative business has been on the decline ever since the long hair trend for both men and women evolved a few years ago in the mid-60's, he says

"Long hair evolved through a lack of discipline, or a complete disregard for it," Ross says "It started with the revolutionaries and the rock groups like the Beatles. It's our permissive society...there is a disregard for laws and human prestige. We do things now because we are at liberty to do so and they become immediately right

Ross says his father was a barber and he had always been intrigued with the profession. When he went to barber college, he says he had "the fastest pair of scissors there" and was able to cut a person's hair in eight to 10 minutes and so he got the front chair

Back then, he says, a student barber only got 40 per cent of the 15 cents that was charged per haircut, but because he was able to do so many customers so quickly, he was able not only to put himself through six months of college, but he also paid for his room and board

Nowadays, he says it's getting so bad, barber shops are forced to advertise for customers and radio stations and newspapers are forever phoning him up

"I say There you are sitting in your chair with long hair trying to sell me advertising forget it!"

Ross says he really has nothing against people who wear long hair as long as they remain ladies and gentlemen He says a lot of younger people wear long hair for the wrong reasons

"I was walking to work today and I found this 'hippie' lying right in the middle of the sidewalk. I mean right in the middle" he says "I asked the kid 'Don't you care what you look like?' and he said that Jesus wore long hair But according to the Bible, First Corinthians, Chapter 11, verses 14 and 15, it says women should be proud of long hair and men should be ashamed of it"

Ross says he is now lucky to get five or six customers a day. One day last week he got only one customer and made $2 50 for a whole day's wages

"I don't make enough money to pay into a pension fund or be worried about income tax," he says "If it wasn't so personal, I'd show you my income tax returns from over the past years so you could see how much they've dropped drastically A year and a half ago there were 91 barbers in Oshawa, now there are only 52"

Ross says he is very proud of his profession because it's one of the oldest ones in the world dating from Egyptian and Roman times

Harry Ross

"I don't know how far back we go," he admits "I know that some Egyptian pharohs were very adamant that before they were entombed in the pyramids they wanted their private barbers to groom them Look at our tools—razors scissors, combs—they're still the same as thousands of years ago The only real advance has been the electric razors and clippers

When his dad was a barber, he says, everyday businessmen, lawyers, drunks and gamblers would come into the shop first thing in the morning for a shave They'd have their own mugs and lather brushes While they were waiting they'd sit around and play checkers or practical jokes or just gossip

"Between 1945 and 1960, when I started, it was a very good time," Ross recalls "A good barber could sustain himself economically very well He could probably clear an average of $20 a day, and that was good money then"

When you consider the cost of haircuts today, he says, they're the cheapest that they've ever been Sure, in the old days they were 25 cents each, he says, but then, no one was earning that much an hour Now haircuts range between $2 and $2 50, he says, and there is hardly anyone who earns less than that an hour

But shorter hair is coming back he says, even though his regular customers only get their hair cut once a month or once every two months

"And the older customers I've retained have diminished in number because of that," Ross says. "It's usually their wives or daughters who bug them not to get their hair cut"

And it's too bad, he warns, because long-haired males will normally go bald quicker than men who wear their hair short There are three layers of skin on the skull cap which tighten as a man gets older because of a lack of circulation, he says

Long hair however will create extra weight on the scalp and will tighten those skin layers prematurely thus causing a man to lose his hair earlier than usual

My prescription for balding men is to make them exercise regularly to create more circulation in the scalp, and to cut their hair shorter"

Ross doubts if he will ever leave the barbering business because a barber gets to meet so many different kinds of people from engineers to drunks

"With some of my regular customers I've gone through their childhood with them through their sports and girlfriends when they were in high school and now their marriages he says. "Some people talk very personally to me. Others tell me their hunting and fishing secrets There's a wonderful closeness

Now, he says, getting a haircut has become almost a mechanical thing and people get mad if they have to wait to get into the chair because a customer is ahead of them

"In the old days Ross remembers, "people used to come into the shop to pass a few hours, read a magazine or whatever Now they haven't got time for that I think we've lost something because of it."

Does prayer really work?

By Rev. John A. Robb.

We are living in a day when people are increasingly pragmatic in their approach to Christianity.

This is especially evident on the college campus where the prevailing reaction seems to be "If it works we will buy it" and vice-versa.

When we say that prayer is waiting before God until our wills coincide with His rather than trying to bend the will of a capricious God to suit our own desires, we are likely to be misunderstood.

The critic steps nimbly on the band-wagon and states that (as he has said all along) God is not likely to change His mind because of our petition i.e. whatever will be will be.

Then there is the other extreme where we are told that God will give us the desires of our hearts. In fact there are various sermons on tape doing the rounds at this moment conveying this erroneous impression.

We are well aware that a text without a context is a pretext and this is a classic example. The Scriptures state: "Delight thyself in the Lord and He shall give thee the desires of your heart. (Psalm 37 v4) This is a horse of a different color!

To study this text carefully will reveal that the last half is contingent on the first half. In other words, if we will delight ourselves in the Lord we will have our desires.

Now it would appear to this writer that to do this involves several things.

according to God's will (1 John 5 v)

in communion with God (John 15 v7-14)

in the Spirit (Jude 20-21)

To come back to the subject at hand, let me say quite categorically that prayer offered with these guidelines assuming the person has become a Christian by personal acceptance of Christ as Savior and Lord is very effective.

All you have to do is to read books like "I Believe in Miracles" by Katherine Kuhlman and "Answers to Prayer" by George Mueller to be absolutely convinced that God does answer believing prayer.

Let me quote a typical example from the diary of George Mueller (June 15 1837-"Today I gave myself once more earnestly to prayer respecting the remainder of the 1 000 pounds (for starting an orphanage). This evening five pounds was given, so that now the whole sum is made up.

"To the Glory of the Lord, whose I am and whom I serve, I would state again that every shilling of this money and all the articles of clothing and furniture have been given to me without one single individual having been asked by me for anything."

From my present congregation I can introduce you to several persons who have been instantly healed in answer to prayer, also to a man who was an alcoholic for 43 years and was delivered instantaneously in answer to prayer not to mention at least three hard drug addicts who were similarly delivered.

You may argue all you like that all these things are psychosomatic or coincidence but the weight of objective proof is against you, my friend!

FIRST RATE ENGINEER

God is a first-rate acoustical engineer. We have been more inept said composer Harry Freedman during a Town Hall panel in Toronto's St Lawrence Centre.

It's interesting to consider that while the voice can be raised to quite a loud level at no time can it be raised beyond the level where it might endanger the ear.

Man's ingenuity, on the other hand has come up with the electronic amplifier which the composer described as "a potentially lethal weapon".

His comments and the meeting followed Environment Minister James Auld's announcement in London of noise regulations for Ontario which go into effect starting this year.

Ephesians 3:3

Meaning Mystery comes from the Greek word musterion It means a secret Today the word mystery means, to most folks something that cannot be understood But in the Bible it is a secret that is kept hid till the time comes to reveal it There may be a little parallel with the ancient mysteries of Babylon and other heathen religions The initiates were led to the inner truths or secrets by stages or degrees which might run from 7 in the worship of Mithra to 33 in the Babylonian mysteries Paul addressed the epistles so far on the mystery to initiates which he called saints and faithful

To Whom? Not only to saints and faithful but to make all men see what is the dispensation of the mystery (Eph 3 9) The expression all men does not necessarily mean all men everywhere literally but rather is so used in these addressed at the beginning of the epistles no difference where they might be We might confine this today to those who have believed John 3 16 unto everlasting life We soon learn by experience that not all can receive it no more than all of Israel could receive their Messiah when He walked with them on earth

The Initiates These are the members of the body of Christ of which He is the Head This body is the church of the dispensation of the mystery These members have died with Christ have been buried with Him have risen with Him have been quickened with Him have been raised with Him to the heavenlies have been seated with Him throne at the right hand of God and some day will be glorified with Him They will live with Him So we will reign with Him if so be that they have endured suffered

When First Revealed or Known? A special dispensation by the grace of God was given to Paul that he should preach this mystery It was revealed to no one else with that purpose There is no evidence that Paul knew anything about it till that day he said to the Jewish leaders in Rome that the salvation of God is sent to the Gentiles (Acts 28 28) Up to that time Paul's ministry was to the circumcision outside Jerusalem and Judaea preaching the kingdom from Moses and the prophets When they rejected the message than he turned to the Gentile believers in the Synagogues and announced to them the good news that they might partake of the blessings of Israel on the ground of faith without the works of the law This was no secret and Paul went to great length to show that it had been foretold See especially Ro 11 But this experience did not work and did not repent God rejected them, postponed the kingdom program and began the church program which had been in mind from before the overthrow of the world

The Messengers When the mystery began the risen Saviour gave gifts to the Church They were apostles and prophets evangelists and pastors and teachers As indicated in Eph 2 20 the apostles and prophets were built on the foundation of these apostles and prophets After the foundation came the work of the evangelists and pastors Evangelists went to the ends of the earth with the good news and as a body the Pastors took charge of the new groups To this day we are still working

Candidates for the crucial position of chairman of the Durham Region have been narrowed down to five

This Week has learned that Walter Beath chairman of the Central Ontario Joint Planning Board, Dr. Matthew Dymond, MPP for Ontario Riding, Whitby Mayor Des Newman, Ontario County administrator Bill Manning, and Darlington Township Reeve Garnet Rickard are the finalists in the province's search for the man to fill this all-important position.

Durham Region MPPs met with provincial treasurer John White last week to discuss the candidates for the chairmanship, expressed their personal preferences and narrowed down the list to five names.

see editorial pg. 2B

White is expected to announce the province's choice for chairman next week.

The overriding concern of MPPs Bill Newman, Charlie McIveen, Alex Carruthers and Matt Dymond is that the chairman be a local man.

The next criterion is that he be someone who is reasonably acceptable to all parts of the region to be implemented fairly.

White appears to be looking for a chairman who is not from Oshawa but who will be acceptable to Oshawa. And he apparently doesn't want a man who has been surrounded by a lot of controversy in the past.

The province would no doubt prefer a Conservative if one can be found to do the job.

Who will the final choice be. Newman experienced

Mayor Des Newman has been an obvious choice for

editorial

Newman would make best regional chairman

Two farmers
A doctor
A manufacturer
A civil servant
That appears to be the choice for big boss of the region
Who will it be?

Elsewhere in this issue, a feature looks at the who and why of the new Durham (?) region chairman, and after some digging our reporter has come to the conclusion that Walter Beath, chairman of the Central Ontario Joint Planning Board has probably got it.

Beath is one of the aforementioned farmers, the other being Garnet Rickard, reeve of Darlington Township. The doctor-candidate is Matthew Dymond, MPP from Port Perry, the civil servant is Ontario County's administrator Bill Manning and the manufacturer, who else but Des Newman, the mayor of Whitby

We were going to turn this editorial into a "memo to John White", the Ontario treasurer but on second thought it appeared that would be useless

"Whitey", as we have heard some of his colleagues call him, has probably made up his mind already. He will do what is best for the people of Oshawa and Whitby and Pickering and Port Perry and "all those that are afar off."

And that's point one.

Who the hell does he think he is in the first place?

Having a provincial treasurer who arbitrarily sets new boundaries for regions and who ignores years of planning is one thing.

Having a provincial treasurer who picks a new name for us all - "D-u-r-h-a-m" - is another

But who does he think he is in appointing a czar over us without an election?

Only practical?

We know it has been done in other regions - and the reasoning our politicians give for this imposition of a head of a new region is that it is the only practical way.

Well, do you buy that? Would you have a Bill Davis for premier unless he was duly elected?

This whole business of big-daddy-Queen's Park knowing what's best for us all is manifested in the decision not to elect a regional chairman

We're going to the polls this fall to elect a regional council. So why on earth can't we at the same time vote for a regional chairman? That way, at least we will have a choice as to who will stand up for us against Queen's Park and we'll all be able to prevent the thing from turning into yet another political hanky-panky situation

But, the legislation has been passed. We will not have an elected chairman. "Whitey" will appoint one

Of course, he's had a few meetings with the MPPs representing the areas involved in the new region. However, we are convinced that up until press time even the MPPs in question did not know for sure just whose name great man White would pull out from under his sweater

We have a lot of respect for Walter Beath. To a politician he would be the ideal compromise candidate. He's an excellent chairman. He's acceptable to most of the parties concerned in the region schemozzle.

But does he really have what it takes?

Des is the boy

We know of only one candidate who has shown for sure that he has all but one of the qualities required. That's Des Newman.

Whitby's mayor is a born leader. He's way ahead of his colleagues in having thought out some plans for tomorrow and 10 years from now.

He's dynamic, a man of the future, with great respect for the past. He's got guts. Perhaps as a chairman he wouldn't be the easiest guy in the world to get along with. But he would be the captain of the ship.

And since the ship is listing badly before it is even properly launched and outfitted for its long voyage, it needs a captain who will be tough with his crew, who will put them to work on repairs and who will eventually make it seaworthy.

One qualification Newman lacks is the fact that he's on record as a Liberal.

Enough said

If you, Mr. White, don't believe it, your boss probably will by now - you boys are going to need all the Liberals (both L's) that you can lay your hands on.

A swinging time

Now that school's out, the youngsters of the region have plenty of time to get down to serious pursuits such as finding a way across the Oshawa Creek. Randy Paterson, 10, (left), Brian Bourque, 12, and Chris Yarrow, 10, (foreground), all of Oshawa, have found that a rope tied to a big tree is one way.

the mainliner

At Oshawa's last city council meeting, Alderman Keith Ross, amid shouts and hurrahs from fellow council members, introduced a motion congratulating the social services committee for doing such a fine job by making Fanfare For Oshawa week the success that it was. While council was busy patting itself on the back, thousands of local residents who also did their bit were still resting up for the thankless effort they put into the event.

No matter how sophisticated mankind becomes, there'll always be a few screwballs around to make things harder for the rest of us. Take, for instance, the individual or individuals who poured sugar in the gas tank of an employee of the Oshawa public library last week. They're probably the same types who cut photographs and rip pages out of library books.

By gosh, she's even madder now! Remember that lady we mentioned a couple of weeks ago who had her groceries delivered by a supermarket and they were left in her apartment lobby where anyone could have taken them? Well, she called to let us know that she had them delivered again and despite the fact that her address was clearly marked on the box, they were left in the lobby of an apartment building across the street. If it wasn't for an honest neighbor, she would have never known what happened to them.

We've had one soldier killed and two others kidnapped while on ICCS duty in Viet Nam. How many more outrages are we going to stand for before we tell the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong to go take a flying leap in the Mekong Delta?

Two long-time General Motors employees were honored recently upon their retirement. Tom Abthorpe and Gord Vinson, both general foremen in GM's material control department, were feted by more than 100 fellow workers at a retirement banquet.

Gayle Neault, This Week's receptionist, could probably sell refrigerators to Eskimos. Last week, keeping a straight face, she convinced a co-worker that the Oshawa Fair was in full swing (it begins July 19) and had the girl and her family show up that night at Alexandra Park. We understand the co-worker has a dilly of a get-even plan, but we can't report it yet because Gayle usually reads this column if her lips aren't too tired from reading the comics.

Provincial parks were unjustly criticized

by peter brouwer

One day last week a Toronto Star reader wrote in complaining bitterly about "unsafe" provincial parks and his family having been "threatened by a moron" one night during their stay at a provincial park

Concluded the letter writer - "it would appear one can only be safe in a private park"

I wasn't there when the "moron" struck, but the letter did upset me. On a number of occasions over the years my family has tried out private parks Thus far we have not found one that measured up, overall to the average provincial park

Why, just a couple of weekends back when we made the mistake of arriving too late for a weekend at Balsam Provincial Park we ended up at a "private park just west of Peterborough. It was an unmitigated disaster, complete with dogs making themselves at home on the beach and in the water, and fat ladies shampooing their lovely locks in the swimming holes

That you would not find at a provincial park. At least, we never have, and we've stayed at at least 50 different ones in Ontario

What does really get to me with the provincial parks is the enormous haste with which it appears the gate keepers put up the "no vacancy" sign

After our disastrous one-night stand in the private park we tried Balsam the next Sunday at noon only to find the "no vacancy" sign once more

A little insisting that on a drive-through we might find a spot after all, got us past the gate

And sure enough, there were at least a dozen empty camping spaces

So to all those who have not had the experience of being stopped by a no-vacancy sign here's some advice Ask if you can go and look for yourself...there's a very good chance a spot is left somewhere

Meanwhile, it'll probably be a few years before the province equips its provincial parks with some kind of automatic device that tells the gate which sites are unoccupied at all times

Since we're on the subject of camping and provincial parks this is as good a place as any to give the powers that be a pat on the back for keeping the "people's parks" in good shape and in the hands of a very capable staff

Perhaps the holiday mood most campers are in has something to do with it but in general the personnel at Ontario's parks are first class. This year they've got girls at some of the park entrances - mostly university students on a summer job - and they're extremely polite and helpful. (At times I wonder if we should get all our civil servants to take turns working in a provincial park. What a way to keep them in touch with reality and mother earth and all that!)

Elsewhere in this issue there's more about camping and outdoors fun. Have a good look. You don't know what you're missing until you've tried a few weekends among campers

In a little over or under the hour's drive from almost anywhere in This Week's readership area there's a number of great camping spots

Thanks, Claude

Claude F. Bennett, minister of industry and tourism, left Monday for a province-wide tour to meet with members of municipal councils, industrial commissioners, tourist operators, chambers of commerce and individual businessmen

He'll be in Grimsby, Welland, Ridgetown and Tilbury, but he won't be in Oshawa

He'll go to Wallaceburg, Sarnia, Cornwall and Kincardine, but he won't go to Whitby.

He'll visit Meaford, Wasaga Beach, Kingston and Fenelon Falls, but he won't visit Ajax or Pickering.

In fact, he plans to hit some 90 Ontario communities east, west and north of Toronto, but will bypass this area altogether.

Are we doing such a good job attracting industry and tourists that he feels we don't need any guidance from the province? Or are we just considered a suburb of Toronto and not worth a visit? Over to you, Claude.

It's not the Zoo or Salt Stee Marie

by tom douglas

"An article on June 26 dealing with the Queen's visit to Ontario Place said part of a film which the Queen saw featured views of the Rockies taken from the front of a train

"In fact, the scenes were filmed north of Sault Ste. Marie."

This item appeared in the Our Mistake box on Page 2 of the Globe and Mail last week and made my blood boil.

Not because Canada's national (?) newspaper was admitting it had made a mistake -- apparently there are some newspapers that do -- but that you Southern Ontarians show a total disregard for us Northerners.

Trust the propoganda sheet for the Bay Street tycoons to mistake the beautiful scenery of Agawa Canyon, just north of the Soo, for the highly-overrated Rockies

You people sit down here with your Macdonald-Cartier Freeway, your Queen's Park, your Ontario Place and your Go Transit system while the good folks up in Hawk Junction and Desbarats and Echo Bay and Wawa break their axles on Highway 17, get a once-a year condescending visit from a couple of cabinet ministers, get their kicks by watching the penned-in buffalo eat grass at Bellevue Park and catch a Budd car at five o'clock in the morning if they want to go anywhere by rail.

Our natural resources are scooped up by the large Southern Ontario concerns so that the sons and daughters of these tycoons can live the good life at Malloney's and Julie's and Merry Mary's. I know, because I saw them there -- strictly in the line of duty, of course, while researching this article.

But the raping of Northern Ontario by the fat cats on the Davis gravy train will end come the revolution. We're going to secede from the province, set up our capital in Kapuskasing with the money we get from selling GM's test vehicles and see that the world finally realizes the contribution the North has made over the years.

For instance, Sault Ste. Marie alone has seen a number of its native sons fed as fodder to the great southern entertainment mill.

Phil and Tony Esposito, Wayne and Chico Maki, Matt and Marty Pavelich, Louis Nanne and Chuckie Cloutier have all been lured south by huge hockey salaries. Debbie Lori Kaye and Donna Ramsey and Gary Buck have all made it big in the country and western field

The list goes on and on, but if there's one thing we Northerners are, it's modest, so that should suffice.

One thing we get tired of, though, is people giggling or making smart remarks when you tell them you're from Sault Ste. Marie

Like the attractive Air Canada passenger agent a few years ago who checked my luggage and handed me a boarding pass at Toronto International when I was going back to the Soo for the annual Fur-Bearing Trout Breeders convention.

As she handed me the pass, she smiled broadly and said: "Have fun in the Soo this weekend. Whoopee!" as she made quick circles in the air with her right index finger pointed at the ceiling.

And no matter where in the world you travel, you can't get away from smart-alec Southern Ontarians making derisive comments.

A little over a year ago, my wife and I were in Morocco and our guide took us to a small restaurant obviously set up for tourists. Sure enough, there was another party of Canadians across the room and one of them hollered over that they were from Toronto and asked where we were from.

I was busy talking to our guide, so my wife hollered back: "I'm from Calgary and Tom was born in Sault Ste. Marie, but he moved to Toronto."

"I don't blame him," the Hogtowner replied.

Sir:

On May 23, my husband suffered an accident at work in which some of the bones in his foot were shattered. The doctor, of course, said he was unable to work until the foot healed and so he applied for Workmen's Compensation

We received a $236 cheque from them June 6 which was to cover the claim until June 7. There were no other forms with the cheque and nothing to tell us when we could expect another payment

After two weeks of waiting I phoned the Workmen's Compensation office in Toronto. I was informed that both my husband and my doctor were to submit progress reports on his injuries, which they told me, should have accompanied the cheque. But I received no such forms

The girl I was speaking with said she would mail the forms so we could get the cheque, but to date we have received none I was told your paper might be able to help

Mrs. Joseph Hovorka,
Ajax

A spokesman at the Workmen's Compensation Board in Toronto apologizes for the delay, which he said could be due to poor postage deliveries. He promised to expedite the matter, and the next day, Mrs. Hovorka received the proper forms entitling her husband to almost four weeks of payment.

Sir:

I bought a Hoover washer-spin dryer Oct. 5, 1970 from Cherney's and it worked well until last November. Then, it just stopped and wouldn't pump out the water or spin dry

Cherney's referred us to Meade's Electrical Repair Service Centre since the warranty had expired

Meade's came right up and looked at the machine and told us the motor was burnt out and would have to be replaced.

Because we are pensioners I was concerned about the price and he told me it would cost about $40. At that time I could only give him $20 but have since paid the full cost of $36.70

They took the machine away to the shop and brought it back with a new motor which has a one-year guarantee. But the problem was not corrected. Since then the machine has been back to the shop four times and it still isn't working. It still isn't pumping the water out or spinning dry

We have been using our neighbor's washing machine all this time and we don't like to do that. Could you please help us get our washing machine working again?

Charles Terry
575 Mary St.
Oshawa

Mr. Meade of Meade's appliance centre reports that he has gone out of his way to help the Terrys. Although he has since installed some new parts in the washing machine he has not charged the pensioners for either the parts or the labor beyond the original $36.70. They have even had the Hoover people in to look at the machine.

But Meade says that Mr. Terry only has to call again and he will take another look at the washer and try to get the problem resolved. The last time the machine was in the shop, he says, they were convinced it was working well before it was returned to the Terrys.

Simpsons-Sears employees get shorter week

The 400 regular employees of Simpsons-Sears in the Oshawa Shopping Centre will enjoy an extra 2 and a half hours of leisure time each week beginning July 16

H.R Borden the store's general manager, has announced that as of next Monday his staff will begin working a 37½-hour week instead of the present 40 hours

Mr Borden said his company is the first major retailer in Canada to adopt the shorter work week for its entire full-time staff

"We are proud of the fact that our company leads the way in being the first major retailer to establish this policy," he said

Mr Borden added however, that the reduction of employee working hours will not affect present store hours, since the new staff hours will operate on a staggered system, with some employees reporting for work one-half hour later in the morning and others leaving one-half hour earlier, depending on various job classifications

"While this is an important benefit for all Simpsons-Sears employees, it is vital that we maintain our usual high level of customer service," he said "Every consideration has been given to this

Mr Borden said the adoption of shorter working hours is one of several benefit changes for Simpsons-Sears employees to be announced over the past year and that further policy changes for the benefit of employees will be announced later this year

Cupboards still a problem

Sir

I appreciate your efforts in your Contact column in trying to help me solve the difficulties I have been having with R H Cabinets concerning the kitchen cupboards I had ordered from them

It seems that Mr Hotot has told you that I have been constantly asking for more than the original contract and at a cost to him'

Has Mr Hotot mentioned just what there changes were?

Although I had contracted for dividers in my cupboards, they were not put in until I had contacted you Another expense to Mr Hotot was due to the cupboards above where the freezer is to be, being too long so the freezer would not fit in However this was not my fault

Also one upper cupboard was too long, another not wide enough and again it was not my fault

Cracked counter tops, short counter top, another counter top too long, nails protruding, cracked upper cupboards, spaces between cupboards - are these my fault?

There are exactly two items I had asked for that I had not asked for originally but only after I had been told that no work as yet had been started on the cupboards, and I was billed for these

One was for two can shelves, and the other was two Corning counter savers

I received a phone call from R. H. Cabinets asking me if I would like to a drawer over the lazy Susan cupboard and I agreed. This was to be added to my expense, not Mr Hotot s

I understand Mr Hotot assured you that the cupboards would be completed last week but this was not done, the cupboards are still not completed

Thank you for your time and help I hope that this problem will be solved before I have a nervous breakdown

Sir:

I would appreciate the opportunity of commenting to a letter to the editor from Isabel Eagleson in the July 4 issue

Her matter concerned the sidewalk issue on Oshawa Boulevard North, which is held up awaiting a hearing of the Ontario Municipal Board (OMB)

The objection to the OMB was made by the Oshawa Council of Ratepayers' Associations (OCRA) of which I am president and not by me personally as Mrs Eagleson states

Our main reason for objecting is the fact that Oshawa is again going to borrow almost $100,000 (about $32 000 for Oshawa Boulevard North at 8½ per cent interest over 10 years to construct sidewalks We are presently almost $25 million in debt and are paying approximately $3½ million a year in interest or about $60,000 to $70,000 a week - exclusive of our debenture debt on educational and hospital facilities

Surely the City of Oshawa can find $100,000 to pay for needed sidwalk construction- they saved almost that amount on snow removal this past winter but quickly spent the money somewhere

If we borrow $100 000 every year for sidewalks it will only take a few years and our interest costs alone for sidewalks will amount to $100,000 a year

OCRA is vitally interested in Oshawa's horrible debenture debt and is trying to help reduce it by drawing attention to it at every single opportunity the sidewalk issue being one of them

In fact, the killing of the John Street extension probably prevented our city from going into another $4 to $6 million debt by the time it would have been completed and paid for

Ironically, the cost of the extension was not even mentioned in last week's council debate

In regards to the Oshawa Boulevard North issue, a number of residents on that street do not want a sidewalk suggesting other solutions to reduce safety hazards

Each group had their opportunity to present their case but the city politicians voted to support the recommendations of the city bureaucrats who incidentally must push their construction projects to justify their high salaries and fancy job titles

OCRA is concerned about the safety of children as was illustrated by our assistance given to the mothers of the Wentworth-Glen Street area a few months ago Incidentally, sidewalks have been on their street for a few years

Finally, we have written to city council in a letter dated June 30 with some very logical commments Depending on their reaction, OCRA will reconsider our objection to the OMB

Thank you for the opportunity, once again, Mr. Editor for presenting our side of the issue

Ratepayers seek injunction to halt garage

By Garnet Cowsill
Staff Writer

The Oshawa General Hospital board of governors has not won yet, says Ed Kolodzie.

Kolodzie, as president of the Oshawa Council of Ratepayers' Associations, has been fighting the board for more than a year now in an effort to make it abandon plans to build a parking garage in the northwest corner of Parkwood.

He has been joined by Bette Compston, president of the Parkwood Neighborhood Ratepayers' Association, and together, they may suceed in getting a provincial court injunction to halt any further proceedings to construct the garage

A $771,000 tender for garage construction was awarded by the board to a Thornhill construction company and work started last week, to be completed within seven months

Kolodzie and Miss Compston have fought the garage at rezoning hearings, hospital general membership meetings, and at an Ontario Municipal Board hearing and were defeated each time

Now, they have appealed to the ministry of the attorney general for an environmental hearing, and in the meantime, an order to halt any further construction of the garage

"Our organization has been fighting this battle for over a year and has made formal presentations to the various bodies involved," Kolodzie says. "We feel our last resort is to lodge this formal petition in an effort to re-open the matter and prevent the destruction of a fantastic estate."

Kolodzie says he and his opposition group have taken abuse from many bodies because of the stand they have taken, including the hospital board and the press, which he says, has not reported the issue accurately or fairly

"(Board chairman) Stan Lovell has practically accused ratepayers of delay causing increased costs to the garage," Kolodzie says "This is completely illogical and unfounded In creased costs are caused by higher wages, inflation and materials All projects must be planned to allow for citizen reaction

Briefly, Kolodzie says his group is opposing the garage on seven points

Parkwood is one of Canada's most outstanding estates and a parking garage on it is "the start of its doom"

The hospital has sufficient property to handle a parking structure but is not willing to demolish two "ugly old structures

An estimated 125 revenue-producing, city-owned parking spots will be eliminated to accommodate a wider road for the garage which will cost almost $100,000 to reconstruct

A citizens' petition opposing the garage which had close to 1,000 signatures received little attention

No environmental hearing on the effects of the garage in terms of noise and air pollution has yet been held

The taxpayers are being asked to spend "probably $1 million" to have the structure built in its first phase

And, the Oshawa Transit has not been directly involved with discussions on how bus service might eliminate the need for a parking garage altogether

Kolodzie says the end cost for the parking garage is quoted as $750,000, but when one ratepayer questioned the actual, end cost of the project at a general hospital membership meeting, "he was almost ruled out of order"

"What is the cost of widening Alma Street, and the lost revenue created by removing about 125 metered parking spots?" he asks "These questions are still unanswered

On top of that, he says the hospital board has still not decided how the maintenance costs of the garage will be handled or whether employees will have to pay to use it

Kolodzie says he is now waiting for word of the injunction from the attorney general's office He says the board was notified that he was planning to bring the court order against them to halt construction but he has not received any word from them on the issue yet either

Bingo is a game for youngsters as well as adults as Scott O'Donnell, 5, of Oshawa found to his delight at the annual UAW picnic held at Lakeview Park in Oshawa on the weekend. Scott was one of an estimated 10,000 people who showed up for the day-long event which featured, among other things, carnival rides for the kiddies, games of chance for adults, a keet shooting and lots and lots of ice cream, hot dogs and hamburgers.

YOU CAN'T TAKE A VACATION FROM DENTAL HEALTH

Proper dental hygiene is a 365 day job. By adopting a few new habits you can help eliminate plaque and cavities. We all know about decay, but what about plaque? This is a combination of bacteria and food which collects on teeth along the gum line. If not removed it will destroy the bony support around your teeth and healthy teeth may be loosened and lost

Brushing helps remove plaque but cannot reach crevices between teeth. Disclosure tablets, dissolved in the mouth show where plaque has been missed in brushing. Dental floss can then be used to remove that which has been left

"A great many people have chosen us to be their personal family pharmacy. We consider this trust a privilege and a duty, and will do all we ethically can to live up to it. We welcome requests for delivery service".

Poor John is dead (for now), but may revive

Wendall Brewster (left), Oshawa director of recreation, Alderman Bruce McArthur (centre) and Mayor Jim Potticary light the official Canada Games torch to be carried to British Columbia from a candle that was ignited last week from the Ontario Summer Games torch.

The John Street extension is dead, but no one wants to say for how long

The extension, that would have linked John Street with Eulalie Avenue between Celina and George Streets and created a major east-west artery, has been on the city books now for about two years

At its last meeting, city council voted against giving the plan approval in a 9-8 vote Previously, it had been tabled each time the project had come up for approval until the works and operations committee decided to bring the matter to a showdown one way or another by asking council to reaffirm support of the plan in its committee report

Following the meeting some councillors speculated that, since another east-west arterial road is still badly needed in the city to take some of the traffic off of Bond and King Streets, the project may be resurrected next year

Up until the actual vote it was a little difficult to determine which way the winds of debate were blowing for or against the project

Probably one of the most influential factors for councillors was a presentation made by Oshawa Fittings Ltd against the extension as works and operations officials had initially planned it

John Brownlie, Fittings spokesman, told council his clients were a little concerned that they had not been consulted about the project before it was taken to a provincial enquiry officer

The plant, which employs about 800 people and pays about $6 million in annual wages, is located directly in line with the link-up and some of its property, which the company plans to use for expansion, would have to be expropriated for the project

Brownlie said the southern portion of a three-acre parcel of land that the company was going to use for expansion would be cut off from the main plant by the extension if it went through

Besides that, he said, the city would have to pay up to $250,000 to relocate a septic pond, directly in line with the extension that would have to be dug up before Eulalie could link up with John Street

Employees who park in a lot facing Bruce Street would either have to exit onto Bruce to go home, or come out right onto John Street and create not only a traffic problem, but perhaps even a traffic hazard, he said

Added to these three factors, he said, expropriation would bring the road within 20 feet of the "sand plant" where sand is constantly blowing from the plant This, he said, would present an additional safety hazard to passing motorists

On behalf of the company, he suggested the city use an alternate route and link John with Gibb Street diverting the extension south

Ald. Cliff Pilkey, who spearheaded the committee's motion for project approval, termed the company's presentation "an admittance that there is at least a need for another east-west artery"

He said he couldn't see the problem the company would have by either being cut off from the main plant or by having employees exit onto John Street, since General Motors, Oshawa's largest employer, has plants which are located on major arterial roads and experience the same situation

He maintained that a traffic crisis was beginning to develop on King and Bond Streets where more than 106,000 vehicles travel a day. The crisis may not be felt now, he said, but if another arterial road is not built soon, it will be

Their (Fittings') alternative of linking John to Gibb will be much more costly because we'd be knocking out all those homes," Pilkey said. "It makes a hell of a lot more sense to link up to Eulalie"

The total project would have cost $1 million with the province and city sharing the cost. Land acquisition for the plan would have been close to $280,000

Ald Mike Breaugh saw the dilemma as a failure by the city to see the need to review its arterial road building priorities and plans He said he would not support the project without further research

Those who voted in favor of the project were Mayor Jim Potticary, Con John McLaughlin, Con. Allan Pilkey, Con Graham Coulter, Ald. Mike Lisko, Ald Gordon Attersley, Ald. Alan Dewar and Ald. Cliff Pilkey

many years as the first chairman of the region.

He has all of the experience that one could ask for He is a successful and dynamic mayor who has governed his town well for eight years

He was chairman of the Oshawa Area Planning and Development Study throughout most of its life

As president of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities this past year he was successful in achieving a new measure of importance for the municipalities in relation to federal and provincial policies

Newman is recognized as an articulate, bright and persuasive man

On the debit side, he has ruffled a few feathers, at every level of government His leadership has been considered too strong by some

He is a Liberal and came very close to winning the Oshawa-Whitby federal seat

GARNET RICKARD

in the 1968 election

Newman, however, has always supported the provincial policy of regionalization

Manning respected

Bill Manning has long been respected for his capable administration of Ontario County matters

He has been a faithful public servant and many years ago served on Whitby Township Council. He's a Conservative and has the support of many people in Ontario County

But he may be too much a county man to be acceptable to Oshawa or even to the other urban-oriented municipalities in the Region. Manning is also getting close to retirement age

Garnet Rickard has had a substantial municipal career in Darlington Township He was the first chairman of the school board in the township and has served 18 years on township council, including four as reeve

WALTER BEATH
Man in the middle

He was United Counties warden in 1959 and unsuccessful candidate for the Conservatives in the 1963 federal election

He is the only candidate from the east end of the region and that may work against him. Oshawa, and Ontario County too, would likely oppose Rickard or any candidate from Darlington since the township has already gotten several concessions from the province to the disadvantage of the city and of the county board of education

Matt Dymond has strong political ties with Ontario County, and many friends throughout the region

He's worked long and hard for the Conservative party and may be getting ready to get out of politics

While an able man who successfully ran the department of health for many years, Dymond's appointment as the regional chairman could appear to many

BILL MANNING
County man

to be a blatantly political act

Then, too, the cabinet might not want to go through another by-election at this stage

Walter Beath has quietly established solid credentials for job over the past 20 years

A former reeve of East Whitby Township and Ontario County Warden, Beath is the chairman of the Central Ontario Joint Planning Board

He was the chairman of the executive committee of OAPADS during its final months

An East Whitby farmer who runs a beef feedlot operation, he has been active in a number of agricultural organizations and has been president of the Oshawa Fair Board

He is also chairman of the East Whitby Planning Board

He's a subdued, relatively inactive Tory who doesn't get involved much

MATTHEW DYMOND
By-election?

in politics He would be a conscientious chairman but not a leader

Beath may be just the kind of generally acceptable compromise candidate the province is looking for

Builder hammers Broadbent on family misery

Sir:

I would very muchliketo submit a reply to Ed Broadbent's statement of last week under the headline "Developers cash in on family misery."

One of the very important reasons to be thankful for the democracy in which we live is that private citizens have the opportunity to criticize what might be considered unsupported and somewhat thoughtless statements made by politicians who certainly bear a responsibility to their public to study the facts before issuing bland statements on matters which have not been carefully researched.

With regard to Mr Broadbent's first statement that our banks and trust companies are gouging the public by charging almost unlawful mortgage rates, has Mr. Broadbent given any thought as to where these banks and trust companies are obtaining the money they are using?

Is Mr Broadbent not familiar with the basic law of supply and demand which is the motor behind our economy?

Obviously this money comes from none other that the public at large, and if money is in short supply, as it is today, it is only because of government policy forcing banks to pay higher interest rates to their investors (i.e., the public) in order to obtain the money that they in turn invest in mortgages

It is the fault of the governments involved collecting excessive income and sales tax (the sales tax on building materials alone is 11 per cent which keeps our money in such short supply, and if the government did not borrow so much and therefore was able to lower the tax rates there would be ample supply of money and the interest rates would go down

I fail to see just exactly what Mr. Broadbent means by his statement that society has failed to provide decent shelter for all its citizens by letting private speculators and developers cash in on the misery of our families

It is because of government bureaucracy and restrictions that competition between developers has been eliminated, which in turn has created a short supply of houses and land

If Mr Broadbent has ever studied the effects of housing situations in countries with socialist and totalitarian systems of governments, and compared them with our own, he would have nothing but praise for our developers, as it proves that government control over such things as housing offers no personal incentive to the developer to supply the public with its best possible efforts

It has been our society and our free enterprise system which has provided most of the "decent shelter in Canada today, not the government , and it is only through the actions - or rather, non-actions - of the government that our housing situation is in the mess it is

It is a fact that Canada has the highest standard of housing anywhere in the world

Certainly it is outrageous that housing prices in the metropolitan areas are virtually at black market

CLOCA complains . city silts soil into creek

The City of Oshawa is inadvertantly responsible for silt pollution of the Oshawa Creek at the Bond Street bridge site

A report sent to Stan White, resources manager of the Central Lake Ontario Conservation Authority, by four students working under a Project Sweep grant to study the creek valley says that fill from the construction site is filtering into the creek causing the problem

Silting, usually the result of soil run-off from development sites, is harmful to fish and other forms of life in natural waterways

This condition was discovered during a survey of the creek valley including wildlife studies undertaken collectively by the city the Oshawa Fish and Wildlife Committee, the authority and the ministry of natural resources

The bulk of the information for this study is being gathered by the same four students who sent in the report on the silting problem at the Bond Street site

The authority will investigate the matter

peples, but this is basically because our municipal, provincial and federal governments have completely failed to provide adequate services to open areas for development and by delaying or not approving such new developments

As a matter of fact, the development policies of these governments leave the impression that they are purposely trying to block development.

Mr. Broadbent's statement that future generations will regard our present approach to housing as one of the great moral outrages of our time should really be that future generations will regard the policy of our government with regard to housing as a great moral outrage.

His example of a financial outlay regarding a 30 year mortgage is misleading. It is quite true that if one borrows money for 30 years for any kind of purchase the interest will accrue to well over the amount of the principal, and should one pay cash such interest charges would not apply.

But it should be pointed out that the interest charges for housing loans in Canada today are the lowest kind of time payment compared to any other goods sold through term financing

Also, Mr. Broadbent's statement regarding NHA loans going to upper income Canadians shows that he is not aware that the majority of housing financing does not come from NHA loans but rather through conventional mortgages.

I would certainly like the public to be made aware of the fact that the housing industry has done its utmost to make the government become aware of present and future problems

As far back as 15 years ago we warned our governments of the land price crisis that lay ahead. Our many proposals to governments at all levels have apparently gone unheeded

If the housing industry had been listened to, it could still be marketing houses today at prices every working man in Canada could afford

In conclusion, I can only suggest that if Mr. Broadbent and others in his position want to assist in improving the housing situation in Canada, it would be much more sensible if, instead of only criticizing they could come forth with some healthy proposals on how to correct and improve the problems

Applauds Sicilian cowboy

Sir:

Oshawa's "Sicilian Cowboy" George Petralia has done it again

This time he has put his home town on the map by taking his Oshawa Country Jamboree to the Warkworth Prison

It was a new experience for all concerned and frankly, I've never seen anything like it. Every entertainer on the show gave his all, and the enthusiasm of the audience was overwhelming

There were too many performers on the show to name them all individually. However, it should be mentioned that when Oshawa's Ron Babich sang a song he'd written especially for the occasion he was given a standing ovation.

Since becoming acquainted with George Petralia a few weeks ago, I have found that there is a wealth of country music talent in the Oshawa area.

Thanks to George, this talent is being given the opportunity to be seen, heard and promoted

George's ambition is to build the Canadian Country Music Hall of Fame in Oshawa. By the way he's making country music happen, he'll probably do it.

I'm sure everybody in Oshawa is proud of George Petralia.

Hair pollution

Sir:

I never felt inclined to write to a newspaper until I read Bob Kirkland's letter in your July 4th issue.

I am a 31-year-old musician whose hair is (gasp) over my collar. I grew my hair longer about six years ago while travelling with a road band.

At first, I let it grow longer simply because I liked the way it looked but attitudes such as Mr. Kirkland's soon turned my hairstyle into a cause

The Beatles introduced long hair in the mid 60's Here we are into the 70's and people like Mr. Kirkland are still howling about it

It never fails to amaze me that some people will go to almost any length to degrade, ridicule and verbally assault someone they don't even know merely because they have long hair

Perhaps if more people like Mr. Kirland put as much effort into researching the real problems facing society as they did in finding ways to put people down, we wouldn't have the ecological and environmental problems that we do have

I'm sure air pollution is a much more pressing matter than "hair pollution"

Poor Mr. Kirkland spent so much time searching for biblical put-downs. I hope he didn't miss the really good things in there while he was using his Bible as a literary club to beat the freaks with

For the past six years I have been harassed, abused and even physically threatened because of my hair. In Sudbury, one miner offered me $300 to let him cut it

Another miner called me a homosexual (not that nicely, though) and actually tried to beat me to a pulp.

Once the name for a long-hair was "mop-top". Nowdays, it's freak, punk, wierdo, faggot, etc, etc.

I have never in my life hassled anyone because his hair was short. I've lost jobs and money over my hair

I've been discriminated against and been subjected to more verbal abuse than I care to think about but I like my hair this way, for God's sake. Isn't that my business?

Please, Mr. Kirland, save your nerves and accept the fact that people always have had and always will have different tastes

It's nice you have short hair I'm glad for you. As for Jesus, I neither know nor care whether He had hair like mine but I do know what it's like to be crucified

I'm not the student of the Bible that you are Mr Kirland (though I loved the movie). Maybe Jesus Christ never was a super-star but I like his outlook a heck of a lot more than yours

Besides words like "vile, dishonor and reproach" you might find peace, love and understanding

Think about it

Loreley and Fanfare

Sir:

Fanfare for Oshawa Week was a grand success as far as the popular "Club Loreley" was concerned where passports were honored through till Saturday

Holders of these passports mingled freely with the many honored guests and club members

A voluntary effort to keep the premises clean and tidy necessitated the closing down of the club during lunchtime

The talented Ukrainian youth dancers from Dnipro pavilion performed at our club, and our dancers performed at their pavilion.

This has given me the greatest satisfaction and with the help of the Oshawa Folk Arts Council we can look forward to a better understanding between the ethnic groups next year at Oshawa's 50th birthday celebration

Praises Terry Kelly

Sir:

I must congratulate you on the very fine article written by your Sports Editor Jim Shaw, on Terry Kelly

Having worked very closely with "Terry" through the years during the construction of the Civic Auditorium, the Centennial Pools and Civic Fields, also with United Appeal I know better than most what a wonderful job Terry has done for our city.

Surely this man deserves a Canadian Medal and the gratitude of all citizens for the wonderful contribution he has made to our fair city

Sir:

In This Week of July 4, an article was written about the Oshawa Union Cemetery in which was stated that Bert Reynen was superintendent of the cemetery

Mr. Reynen is temporary superintendent while the superintendent, Robert Pierson, is recovering from a stroke at the Oshawa General Hospital.

Mr. Pierson has been associated with the Union Cemetery for the past 37-½ years, and it is hoped his recovery will soon be sufficient to enable him to return to work

Either Christ was God or a raving lunatic

by Rev. John A. Robb

To many people, Christianity is narrow, legalistic and bigoted in that it conveys the fact that not only Christ is unique but that He is the only way to God

It is pointed out that there are some eight major religions in the world of which Christianity is but one and that the other cannot possibly be considered wrong!

In other words, people would have us believe that there are many ways to God so that it does not greatly matter which of the several routes is selected One is reminded of the old Scottish song "You Take The High Road And I'll Take The Low Road"

When Jesus stated in John, Chapter 14 Verse 6, "I am the Way (not one way), The Truth, the Life No man comes to the Father except by Me", He recorded for all time that which the Christian believes

If a believer thought for a moment that everyone would ultimately be saved by one means or another, he certainly would not subscribe to the pouring of millions of dollars into missionary enterprise in order to reach those who are steeped in other religions!

Either Jesus Christ was God as He claimed constantly to be or He was a raving lunatic. So there is no good going around saying "I thing Jesus was a great teacher and philanthropist" or "the greatest prophet that ever lived" There are only the two options open to us

Various great prophets and teachers over the centuries have claimed that they would show us the way but only Christ stated that He personified the way

Even a cursory examination of nature will indicate that things are narrow and precise, e.g., water boils at 212 degrees F and freezes at 32 degrees F, the force of gravity is a reality, and so on. That God, therefore, should be narrow and precise in the provision for eternal life should not be considered an unreasonable premise

The basic thesis of the current continent-wide program entitled "Key 73" is that Christ is the only way Various non-Christian groups have come on the media recently indicating wrath over this matter of trying to convert to Christianity members of their particular religion

If we are walking in the downtown area at three o'clock in the morning and observe smoke and flames billowing out of the fourth floor of the hotel, we would be guilty of criminal negligence if we continued homewards without rushing into the hotel and warning the residents of the danger

Initially the guests may be hostile to somebody running madly around trying to wake them up, but when they ultimately see the danger from which they have been rescued they will be eternally grateful!

This columnist (and every Christian) would be guilty of greater negligence if they failed to warn persons outside of Christ to "flee from the wrath to come'

Various Secrets in the NT Take, for an example the 8 parables of Mt 13 They are the mystenes of the kingdom of heaven It is evident that in the 12th chapter the King and the kingdom were being rejected So the mystenes have one thing especially to reveal It was that there was to be an interval between the cross and the crown If they had carefully looked at Da 9 they would have understood that this interval would have been 56 years Since the cross came in A D 29 then the crown would have been in A D 85 All this was given in parables so that the people might not understand but to the disciples it was given to know and the Lord explained what was meant We cannot tabulate here all the secrets or mystenes mentioned but note one especially the mystery of iniquite (2 Th 2 7) That will be manifested in a person

The Wider Gap of Hosea 6 Because of the parenthesis of the dispensation of the mystery the gap of 56 years has been widened to 2056 years This is found by adding the 2 days or 2 000 years Alino the time element was not a secret, yet the character of that time as to the nations was kept secret A dispensation such as is now in force was never before made known till after the end of the events recorded in Acts Up till the end of Acts all prophets men and angels and even Satan himself were unaware of the fact that the nations of the earth could be blest other than thru Abraham Neither did they know at any time that redeemed men could have a part in and enter into the heavens This had been Satan s domain

Other Related Mysteries. One is the mystery of godliness as set forth in 1Ti 3 15, 16 This can make a good study in itself Another mystery is the mystery of Christ (Eph 3 4) This could never be fully known till the dispensation of the mystery was revealed Not all was even told concerning Christ till the dispensation of the mystery showed Him t nh as Head not only of the church but of all things in heaven and earth (Eph 1 9 10)

We Know in Part Prophecy is always hard to understand till it has been fulfilled As an example of that consider the prophecies concerning Christ Some spoke of His suffenngs and some spoke of His glory The Rabbis of Israel could not see how that both the suffenngs and the glory could belong to one person So they said that there must be 2 Messiahs one a suffering One Ben Joseph the other a glorious One Ben-Dayid (Ben means s son of) Might this be the reason they asked Do we look for another (Mt 11 3)? The mystery is not revealed in Romans It speaks of the partial blindness of Israel and the grafting in of Gentiles So Ro 11 25 does not answer the question of how long, as some think Isa 6 does speak of the blindness, but not of its duration and the character of what would take its place Refer also to Mt 13 14 Joh 12 40 and Ac 28 26

Usage of Ekklesia In the LXX the Heb word qahal is translated by the Gr word ekklesia So we can see that the church in the wilderness (Ac 7 38) was the congregation of Israel It is this church that Christ said He would build on the foundation Peter s confession (Mt 16 18) This church was no secret

Barry Timbers (left) and Paul Wannamaker are the two best pitchers in the Oshawa and District Fastball League says Sports Editor Jim Shaw

Wannamaker and Timbers are the best hurlers in the OFL

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

For years the Oshawa Tony's Senior Fastball club were blessed with top pitchers

Chuckers like Normie Bagnell and Charlie Justice, just to mention a couple, used to pack them in at Alexandra Park for scheduled league games in the Beaches League

When Gerry Brooks took over a general manager of Tony's, he introduced the idea that his pitchers wouldn't receive pay for their talents. This brought up a lot of complaints from the fastball faithfull as they claimed without a top named chucker Tony's wouldn't be a winner

For years, Brooks considered Oshawa had top talent developed right in their own City & District league Brooks an executive member of the minor program in Oshawa, proved that he was right.

Pete Landers, the top pitcher in Canada today came out of the junior ranks with Scugog Cleaners and immediately pitched Tony's to an Ontario championship

Since then, Landers has pitched on countless Canadian winners both oneastern Canada and in Weyburn, Sask Latest of Brooks upstarts are lefty Barry Timbers and sophomore righthander Paul Wannamaker

Like Landers, both Timbers and Wannamaker rolled with Scugog Juniors prior to joining senior ball for Tony's

This season Tony's are solid second place holders in the Ontario Fastball League which is the closest thing to professional fastball in Canada

Both pitchers have lived up the advance press which Brooks has talked about

Timbers, Canadian plowing champion, throws from the left side and is only 23 years old and has a bright future ahead of him

Looking at his record this season, Timbers has a brilliant 10 win, three defeat record and is the workhorse on the pitching staff. He has worked a total of 110 innings allowing only 56 hits, 11 earned runs, a mere 13 bases-on-balls and has claimed a total of 132 strikeouts

In the clutch Timbers is just outstanding having a brilliant .090 earned run average.

A native of Uxbridge, Timbers is just as good as Landers. However, he doesn't receive the same type of recognition from the media

Despite having an early-season injury, the hard-throwing Wannamaker has really come into his own lately Only problem seems to be that when he pitches Tony's have problems scoring runs

Paul has the top ERA in the league, a sparkling .057 which is about a half run per nine innings pitched

He, like Timbers, is a strikeout artist having claimed 90 strikeouts in 63 innings pitched which is a better percentage than Timbers

Tony's pitching is just great and if the hitters could ever match the chuckers output, Tony's would become the new world champs

Councillors challenge This Week

City Hall wants another beating!

City councillors have challenged This Week again - this time in softball

Last winter, City Hall players, consisting of the mayor and his council, played This Week staffers and lost a narrow 3-2 hockey game with the big winner being muscular dystrophy

According to the council members the game ended in a 2-2 tie, but our records clearly indicate that it was a one-goal victory for the Scribes

This mixup has resulted in another challenge to prove once and for all who are the champs

This Week hopes to have an imported pitcher for the game We've already talked to Peter Landers, from the Toronto Globals, Norm Bagnell, former Oshawa Tony's ace and have even been in touch with Bonnie Jones, ace right-hander with the Detroit Nordurft Tool club to be the pitcher for This Week in this abbreviated softball game which will last three innings

All proceeds will again be turned over to charity

The game will be taking place at Alexandra Park, Tues. Aug. 14

Redken explains how to wash your hair without washing the life out of it.

If your hair is lifeless the culprit could be your shampoo Because many shampoos are alkaline And alkalinity destroys your hair's natural acid balance, leaving it dry and dull

Alkaline shampoos are hard on a girl's hair. In fact they're incompatible with the naturally healthy state of your hair According to science, your hair is at its healthiest when it is between 4.5 and 5.5 pH acidity Alkaline shampoos can have an alkaline pH of 8.2 to 9.0 or higher which is incompatible with nature's normal acid state

Amino Pon Shampoo offers your hair a different way of life Amino Pon is compatible with your hair because it's organic protein and naturally acid balanced like your hair Its acidic 4.5 pH formulation conditions as it cleans, leaving your hair cleaner, livelier, healthier looking and more manageable Amino Pon Shampoo washes life in—not out

Amino Pon's so good for your hair, you don't have to wash it out. Many women who use Amino Pon find that they've had to change some of their ideas about shampoos Because of its organic protein, acid balanced formulation Amino Pon's not the sudsy stuff you may be used to And unlike other shampoos, you don't have to wash Amino Pon out For extra body and shine, you can leave the second lather in

How does Redken know what's good for you? Scientific research The result of which is Redken's Scientific Approach to Beauty And a complete line of organic protein acid balanced products that are compatible with the natural state of your skin and hair

- Amino Pon Beauty Bar A protein based nonsoap with the same acid balanced pH as the skin Gives you the freshness of soap and water cleansing, without drying your skin
- PHinal PHase Creme Rinse Removes tangles and helps prevent split broken ends Restores radiance Leaves your hair manageable
- H P "19" and Crystalite Both wave sets are acid balanced and contain protein Both give your hair radiance and bounce Crystalite Moisturizing Creme Protein Conditioner Brings dry dull hair back to life by restoring the hair's natural moisture balance Combats brittleness frizziness and breaking
- PPT "S 77" The acid balanced protein conditioner that works wonders on badly damaged hair Helps restore and rebuild hair Helps keep it in good condition

Lacrosse dead

Brooklin Redmen call it quits; may never have a club

One of the powerhouse teams in Senior "A" lacrosse over the past decade, the Brooklin Redmen, have folded

Redmen, who were experiencing their worst record in a long distinguished career, which included two Mann Cup championships and countless intermediate provincial titles, were forced to fold due to the lack of player support

The team lost all 13 games it played and was in trouble right at the start of the campaign

Lack of good player talent was the main reason why the team folded

Always billed as the smallest town in Canada with the best lacrosse teams, the loss of Brooklin ends an era of outstanding clubs which featured some of the best players who ever picked up a stick

Before the start of the season, Redmen seemed to have a powerhouse. But Frank Wilbur, the club's general manager, just couldn't come to terms with the players

A lot of the so-called super stars had played earlier in the now defunct professional league, and wouldn't play unless they were paid. For years, Brooklin operated on a profit-sharing basis with the earnings being split on an equal basis among the players

Like most clubs when they fold, chances of operating again seem almost impossible

"It seems that players of today don't play for the game anymore," explained a Brooklin club spokesman, "but rather for the money. With the type of budget being operated by Brooklin they just couldn't afford to operate this way."

Professional lacrosse which tried twice to succeed, and failed, has taken most of the blame for the Brooklin failure this season because the majority of players who turned pro are ex-Brooklin members

The climax was a 44-7 defeat a few weeks back to the front-running Brantford Warriors which coaxed manager Frank Wilbur and coach Bob Hanna to pack it in. The final game was in Peterboro against the Lakers. Assistant general manager Mike Gray attempted to have 26 players turn out for the game, but only 11 showed up, and one of those had an injury

Only Don Craggs, Dave Houston, Wayne Sorchetti, Mike Lewis and Jack Chisholm were the players out for the games

Brooklin scored less than 100 goals but had more than 400 scored against them so Wilbur gave the players who did turn out marks for at least having the "guts" to try and stick it out

In most games, Brooklin would be able to stay close to the opposition until the third period when they just ran out of fresh legs to be able to keep going

The Senior "A" loop now has only four clubs remaining, including the Toronto Shooting Stars, Peterboro Lakers, Brantford Warriors and the Brampton Excelsiors

It is rumoured that other clubs are experiencing the same problems which Brooklin has had

Redmen's last Canadian title came in the 1969 season, and the year earlier they won another Mann Cup. Player talent always seemed to be available with the strong junior teams in Oshawa and Whitby

Players who really let down Redmen this year year included a number of former Green Gaels aces who failed to show up for games

It marks the end of the fantastic era and the executive of yesterdays, like Fred Whalley, Bob Vesey, who, along with Mike Gray, Luther and Bill Vipond, were fighting a losing battle to keep senior lacrosse alive

Back in the 60's Brooklin lost its powerful softball team thus leaving no major sports team there. As it now stands, only the defending Whitby B & R Transporters will be playing its home games at the Brooklin rink

Bob Hanna, the team's coach, has taken over a similar job in Toronto with Elmer Tran, Jack Chisholm, Dave Houston and Mike Lewis expected to join the Shooting Stars

The other players have been made available to the Fergus Thistles of the Senior "B" series

The Brooklin Redmen (in dark jerseys) have packed it in as a team and the future of lacrosse in Brooklin seems rather dim at the moment. This particular photo was taken when the Redmen were playing the Toronto Shooting Stars earlier this season.

Green Gaels fizzle

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

Oshawa Green Gaels, who rewrote the record books in Junior "A" lacrosse in Canada during the 1960's, have come into an era of winning clubs which has dropped them into the league basement

Gaels, have managed only five wins against 17 losses and are buried deep in the league cellar

Chances of making the play-offs seem remote, and with only six games remaining in the schedule including two against the defending Minto Cup champions Peterboro squad, it looks like a short summer for coach Ron Pither and his charges

"Gaels certainly have had problems," admits club General Manager Brian Drew, "but we are looking towards the future rather than this season. This campaign has had a lot of problems for the Gaels."

The Green and White have suffered seven one-goal setbacks, lost two games by a pair of goals and two games by three goals

Inexperience has been the major problem with the Gaels and the lack of a team leader to be a floor general. Oshawa started the campaign on paper having the nucleus of a solid club with 13 holdovers available for the roster

Only Jeff Rorabeck, Larry Lloyd, Joe Greentree Tommy Wreggitt, Stan Cockerton Chris Bone and Jeff Mason have stuck with the Gaels John Reed, a potentional 50-goal sniper suffered an injury last year and decided to play out his junior career with the defending Ontario championship team Whitby B & R Transporters

Murray Cawker, one of the best defensemen in the circuit and a four year veteran who tallied 50 times last semester, quit

Tom Christie packed it in due to a job assignment a few weeks back and left a gaping hole in the goaltending department Doug Bannon, a 53-goal scorer quit Jimmy Browne, who cashed in 28 markers, quit and Tom Rarabeck, a solid checker and a 21-goal scorer also quit

With the loss of the veterans, youngsters were forced to fill the holes and the inexperience has told in narrow defeats

The future looks bright, however, as the minor system has started to redevelop under the leadership of Danny Kocho

Gaels still have an outside chance of making the post-season play

Meet Reynen of the Gaels

Rookie Marty Reynen is undoubtedly one of the up and coming players who will help make the Gaels a top contender in future years

Now 17, Reynen will be able to use the experience he gains this year to full advantage in his four remaining years as a junior

After a year away from the sport, Marty has returned to competition in good form, making the "A team in his first try-out Best of all, he has not seemed out-of-place at all offensively or defensively His size and checking ability could possibly make him a keynote in Gaels' teams in years to come

Marty like most of the boys on the team, is a graduate of the Oshawa Minor Lacrosse system He credits Bill Langley, his coach in both bantam and midget ranks, for his success Here he received valuable training in the basics of the game, along with the discipline necessary to compete at a junior level

His first year of junior play, he cites inexperience as the biggest obstacle for both him and his team

"Often, we'll have one bad period in a game," Marty comments "This is where our inexperience shows the most We've lost many games to the more inexperienced clubs just because of this."

Besides playing lacrosse Marty is a grade 12 student at Oshawa Catholic High and plays both soccer and hockey, listing the latter as his favorite During the past season, Marty was a member of the all-Ontario champion Parkway TV Midgets Thinking ahead, he hopes to play either junior "B" or juvenile all-star next year

At home, the entire Reynen household takes an active interest in the sports that Marty plays. His parents, along with his two sisters, Betty and Theresa followed the Parkway team through the Ontario playdowns and attend all Green Gael home games

OSHAWA GREEN GAELS PLAYER OF THE WEEK

MARTY REYNEN

We take great pleasure in saluting the 'Player of the Week' each week in this spot.

WHA fires pass at Lochead and Fogolin

The upstart World Hockey Association professional league is seeking the service of two talented members of the Oshawa Generals of the Ontario Hockey Association Junior "A" league, captain Lee Fogolin and rightwinger Billy Lochead

Ever since the Houston Aeros inked up the Howe brothers, Mark and Marty, from the Memorial Cup champions Toronto Marlboros, raids on other junior-aged players have begun

The WHA is probably after the two brightest prospects in Canadian Junior "A" hockey today when they go after Fogolin and Lochead Winnipeg Jets, under coach Bobby Hull, have been talking with Fogolin at his home in Thunder Bay, but the son of the ex-Chicago Black Hawk doesn't seem to be interested in professional hockey at the age of 17

He was acquired by the Gens in a trade with the Hamilton Red Wings early last season and shows promise of being an excellent pro player of the future

Meanwhile, Lochead, who lives in his home town of Forest nearby Sarnia, has been contacted by the Cleveland Crusaders. Jack Vivian the new general manager in Cleveland tried to lure Lochead away a year earlier when he was the head coach at Bowling Green University

General manager and coach Gus Bodnar of the Gens feels confident that both players will be returning to Oshawa when training camp opens up September 7th at the Aud

"It's hard for both youngsters to make a decision," claims Bodnar, "but I'm sure their lawyer, Allan Eagleson, will be setting them straight about the future they have in hockey.

It's no secret that if the Gens lost both players there would be a long season ahead because Bodnar is counting on them to make the club a top contender. Bodnar, asked if he was leaving the Gens to join the new Washington club in the NHL says "Sure. Milt Schmidt (the team's general manager) and I have had conversations about me joining them, but I'll definitely be back in Oshawa this season

Two years ago, Oshawa became Bodnar's home after he had coached Sault Lake City in the Western League after a successful earlier career with the Marlies

According to Bodnar, Gens have been in contact with all their Midget draft picks and they have all indicated strongly that they will be reporting to camp in September

Generals will be playing a 70-game schedule this season, including 35 home games. They will play 14 games each on Sunday and Saturday nights and the remaining seven games on Tuesday

Tuesday games will start at 7:30 p.m., an Saturday at 7:15 p.m., and Sunday at 7:30 p.m

Oshawa opens up the season with a road game against the newest team in the league. Kingston Canadiens September 28 and hosts the Marlboros in the home opener September 30

Oshawa will have eight exhibition games, a home and home series with the Peterboro TPT Petes Kingston Canadians, St. Catharines Black Hawks and Toronto Marlboros

Oshawa and Whitby politicans square off

Area politicians will face off in a soccer battle July 29 which will once and for all decide whether Oshawa or Whitby is more on the ball.

Sponsored by the Whitby Minor Soccer Association, the game will be part of the Whitby County Town Carnival celebrations taking place in Whitby's Peel Park at high noon

The Oshawa team will face the showdown with such men of stamina as Oshawa-Whitby MP Ed Broadbent, Mayor Jim Potticary, Con. Allan Pilkey, Ald Cliff Pilkey, and Jesse Buxcey, president of Oshawa's Senior and Minor Soccer Association

The Whitby battlers will include Mayor Des Newman, Reeve Tom Edwards, and the president and executive of the Whitby Minor Soccer Association

Volleyball girls wanted

Oshawa is planning to enter a team in the Ontario Volleyball league this fall and is looking for players to form a club

Girls from ages 17 and over are requested to call either Doris Cherkas, 728-5817, or Lib McMillan, 725-8757, for complete information on the club

Belly-buttons are being shown this year

Quite a titilating sight to see the cute undulations of the navels on the sweet young things desperately trying to beat the heat. Well, speaking of beating the heat; why not buy a summer suit, sport jacket or other summer finery at MURRAY JOHNSTON'S ½ YEARLY SALE of FINE MEN'S WEAR that starts on MONDAY 16th July. City streets closed but not for repairs

Cars, cops and customers will all come together July 26 and 27 for sidewalk displays set up by downtown Oshawa businesses and service organizations.

Organized by the Downtown Oshawa Association which includes approximately 40 retail stores and businesses, the two days will feature a display of the city's police department in front of the station, an OPP safety display, and equipment of the Oshawa Fire Department at the Four Corners.

"Boats, motors, trailers, motorcycles and automobiles will be part of the displays," says Greg Kane, a member of the merchandising committee of the association. "The city has given permission for us to close off Ontario Street between Bond and King Streets, Celina Street between King and Athol Streets, and Prince Street between Bond and Richmond Streets both days from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m."

Further details of the downtown sidewalk displays will be published next week.

Singers return from Florida

Sixty members of the County Town Singers of Whitby recently returned from an eight-day visit to Miami, Florida, where they were the featured guest singers at the Lions Club International Convention

The incoming president Clifford T. Coffin, of Montreal, had heard the County Town Singers during a performance at Port Perry and recommended that the singers, including several Lions Club members, represent the Whitby area

According to Jim Ashley, the director, "everyone really enjoyed themselves." Jim said this in spite of being thrown in the pool fully-clothed

CITY OF OSHAWA

THANK YOU

On behalf of my colleagues on City Council, I would like to thank the many thousands of volunteers who assisted in making "Fanfare for Oshawa" a wonderful success. This was a community project which brought all citizens together for a period of five days and will be remembered for many years.

I wish also to express sincere appreciation to those who worked so diligently and gave of their own time to carry forward to a successful completion the first Ontario Summer Games which will go down in the sports' annals of the Province of Ontario.

JAMES H. POTTICARY
Mayor.

Mayor James Potticary (left) stepped in at the last minute to find an apartment for the McMartins. Their plight was originally made public through a letter to This Week's Contact column.

"Sold my 35 MM Camera through your articles for sale ads Got a lot of calls"

Potticary gives McMartins keys to a new life

Mayor Jim Potticary last week came to the rescue of a large Oshawa family about to be evicted from their apartment on Charles Street

After months of searching for a low-rental apartment in the city with the threat of a June 30 expiry date on his lease, Ken McMartin made a last-ditch appeal to the mayor at 3 p.m. July 3

Potticary came through an hour and five minutes later with the keys to a 10-room, city-owned house on Harmony Road South, near Donevan Collegiate

Early in June, McMartin asked Contact This Week to help him find accommodation for his family of eight He had contacted every community organization he could think of and none had been successful in finding him a place

His own efforts had resulted in rejections by landlords who didn't want to rent to so large a family

The deadline to move from the four-room apartment came and went, and he still hadn't found an apartment or a house he could afford to rent. So he just stayed put

The woman who had rented his old apartment from July 1 on was not to move in until July 14, but she demanded he get out by 6 p m. July 3

They almost made it. By midnight that night, McMartin and his six children had moved most of their belongings to their new home and finished the job last Wednesday

The McMartins are ecstatic about their new home and thankful for the help they received from Mayor Potticary

They also appreciate the rent - $125 a month, $10 less than they had been paying for a four-room apartment

Lack of money had been a major factor in their inability to rent suitable accommodations McMartin takes home less than $100 a week from his job in the service department of an Oshawa car dealer, so he could afford no more than $150 a month rent

His situation was complicated by his wife's illness and hospitalization and doctor's orders to find a larger place so Mrs. McMartin will have the peace and quiet she requires

The family is ineligible to apply to low rental public housing since they have been city residents for less than the required year

This Week carriers on ice

This Week carriers will be receiving a bonus this summer through the co-operation of the Oshawa Fundamental Hockey School

Our circulation department will be choosing one carrier for each session of the month-long school to be operated at the Harman Park Arena

The school opens July 30 and continues through the weeks of Aug 6, 13 and 20 running four hours daily

Former This Week sports writer, Jack Lynch now a member of the national league's Pittsburg Penguins, along with Steve Cartwell, Hank Nowak, Ted McComb, all former Oshawa Generals, and Larry Bignell will be instructing at the school

outdoor living

It's summertime and the living is terrific says Roger Stanton, 10, (above left) whose father's boat was launched in Oshawa Harbor recently Roger is one of more than 100,000 residents of the area who enjoy summer in various ways as set out on the following pages Photos by Norton

Swimming pools

Vinyl vs. concrete-a matter of taste

The above-ground pool owned by This Week's Sports Editor Jim Shaw is a popular spot for his family and their neighborhood friends.

Swimming pools used to be a luxury enjoyed only by the very wealthy

But in recent years more and more middle income people have been installing swimming pools in their backyards Many are selling their cottages and escaping the weekend traffic Other families have reached the stage when they can afford either a cottage or a pool and are opting for the pool

The battle between concrete pool builders and suppliers of vinyl -liner pools rages hot and heavy Each is firmly committed to his own product and advances arguments supporting the advantages of his own type of pool

To find out about the various types of pools This Week talked to Jim Hambly president of Coral Pools a company that has been installing concrete pools for six years, and two executives from Major Pools the largest manufacturer of package vinyl-liner pools in Canada

A concrete pool costs between $3 000 and $7 000 depending on the size shape and accessories The average pool installed is 16 feet by 32 feet which Hambly feels is an ideal size for a family

"A good concrete pool, he says never loses its value and is there for life

Coral pools come in many shapes and sizes, including the exotic curved and irregular shapes

They are finished to require no painting and a minimum of upkeep, according to Hambly and there is a five year guarantee

Installation takes between five and 15 days, depending on the weather

The only problem with concrete pools says Hambly is algae This can be avoided by using the proper chemicals

Installed vinyl-liner pools are somewhat less expensive but he says there is always the danger that the liner will be ripped.

Spokesmen for Major Pools, minimize the danger of tearing the vinyl liner The company guarantees its liners for 10 years

A vinyl-liner pool has a steel or aluminum framework covered by the thick and tough vinyl liner

A 10 foot by 21 foot vinyl-liner pool package sells for about $1300, while at 20 foot by 40 foot pool costs about $3,000 The package contains the metal framework, the liner the filter and certain fittings

On top of that installation costs about $1 200 to $1 500 and a diving board another $150 An accessory kit containing vacuum cleaner pool thermometer, storage racks and a two step ladder sells for an additional $200

A complete installed pool with all these accessories would vary in total price from $2,850 for a small one to $4,850 for the larger model

Lloyd Finmar, comptroller for Major Pools says the equivalent concrete pools would cost about $1,200 more

Mike Myers, in charge of customer relations and quality control for Major Pools says that vinyl-liner pools are easier to maintain and require less chemicals than do concrete pools

Vinyl liners can be patched if torn, or replaced, he says

After the excavation is dug, he says a vinyl pool can be installed in six or seven days

While theoretically the handyman can bring a few of his friends over to help install this kind of a pool Major Pool officials advise that the job has to be done perfectly or problems can re-ult and the warranty is invalidated

The decision whether to buy a concrete or vinyl liner pool boils down to the money a family has available or wants to put into a pool

A concrete pool costs a little more but likely lasts longer It can also be built along more artistic lines than the typically rectangular vinyl-liner pool But the vinyl-liner pool is less expensive in the initial outlay and satisfies many families pool needs

Proper landscaping means planning

Unless you want a jungle in your backyard, get good advice before you decide to landscape

Herb Lamers of King West Garden Centre and Harry Van Belle of Van Belle Garden Centre agree that you should not set out to landscape your yard without first arriving at a plan

Even once you've got what you want down on paper, don't be in any great hurry to get the job done. A well landscaped yard isn't done overnight, they say and in many cases can take a number of years

If you're not sure what you'd like to see your yard look like your best bet is to drop in to the nearest garden centre for advice on soil conditions tree planting and other landscaping techniques

The first thing most people think of in relation to landscaping is trees. The problem they run into is that they don't know what types of trees are available, which will suit their plan the best and where they should be planted

These days most landscaping is done around the backyard swimming pool, because as Lamers says, a yard should be landscaped to emphasize the pool

The popularity of pools has resulted in more and more people taking pride in their yards because they spend more time there

Lamers says you would be wise before you have your pool installed to arrange to have your yard landscaped In many cases he says, the professional landscaper can advise you on the best location for your pool

Another advantage of doing this, he says is that the fill from the pool site can be used by the landscaper to terrace the yard for rockeries which will form a background to the pool

If you wait until your pool has been installed before calling the landscaper it can mean him having to bring in fill. This can prove a costly process

If you've got a pool or are getting one in, then take care in your choice of trees to complement the scene Lamers and Van Belle agree that the best trees for the pool-side are evergreens.

This is because they have no foliage drop which could get in the pool. Some people plant trees five feet from the pool, ending up with a mess of leaves and a continuous cleaning job later on in the summer .

Lamers stresses that landscaping a yard does not have to be done by a professional, but with good advice you can do it yourself. which means a lower cost

The results of good landscaping are shown in the reward of having a beautiful yard

Nellie Lamers works in the backyard of her Gibbon Street home in Oshawa Her husband, Herb, through his King West Garden Centre, advises many homeowners on landscaping of their property

Travel Mate a year-round apartment on wheels

By Peter Brouwer

Herbert Thompson of Wicklow Court in Oshawa is a proud Canadian. He doesn't come right out and say about an American that "anything you can do, we can do better," but I'm convinced he believes it

A few weeks ago my family tried a Barth motor home We had a wonderful trip and thoroughly enjoyed the use of the big machine

So Thompson wrote in the next week saying that was all very well and good, but that he sells and services a Canadian-made model, "a very little-heard-of unit, but one of the better-built and winterized"... and how about giving it a try for a weekend

We did

And our conclusion is that somebody out there in Owen Sound, Ont really knows how to make a practical and very nicely-finished apartment on wheels

Ours was a Travel Mate model 2501, 25 feet long, 7 ft. 8 inches wide, with an interior layout that sleeps seven people comfortably

Built on a GM truck chassis, the Travel Mate has an all welded tubular steel frame. The coach work and heavy equipment on board are balanced so that the entire unit offers precise handling and has the roadability of a car. In fact, after you get used to driving one for a few hundred miles you don't feel any different than you do when driving the family chariot...except that the kids are much better behaved out there inside somewhere, reading or playing cards or what have you

This summer we're planning a long jaunt in a motor home and our two latest outings have given us a number of good pointers like putting the Hibachi in the trunk last, so you can use it for lunch when you stop at a picnic area

Back to the Travel Mate It comes with automatic transmission, power brakes, 8 ply front and dual rear wheels, two heavy duty batteries with automatic charge relay, a heavy duty alternator, a 45 gallon water tank and a 45 gallon holding tank and 4.5 ft. gas-electric fridge, a six gallon water heater, shower and monomatic toilet, a two compartment sink, a ducted forced air furnace, a 12 volt water system with water and holding tank gauge and a double bunk over the driving area

Travel Mate prides itself in being thoroughly winterized, which may not be much of a subject this time of the year, but does really count when you consider the outlay for a motorhome

The tubular steel frame is constructed on 24 inch centres and insulation is 1-½ inch styrofoam The exterior is of salt resistant anodized aluminum with baked-on enamel, bonded on ¼ inch wood sides, top and ends

The floor on the roadside is .025 anodized aluminum with baked enamel, ⅝ inch plywood, ½ inch styrofoam and ⅝ inch plywood

The windows are anodized aluminum frame with safety glass

All in all, Travel Mate's terrific idea offers a little home on wheels built for use 52 weeks of a year. It's great for the sportsman, in fishing, hunting skung and snowmobiling the retired or semi-retired or even the family that likes to go camping regularly, but likes to have all the comforts of home

Fuel situation still bad in U.S.

Of the 3,852 gasoline stations checked by the American Automobile Association along major travel routes in the U.S. only 43 percent are operating normally, says the Ontario Motor League

While 49 percent of the stations contacted are limiting hours of operation with late night and Sunday closing still the trend to stretch fuel supplies, 11 percent of all stations are allocating purchases

Improvement is expected in the overall situation, however, with the announcement by four major oil companies that they are increasing shipment of fuel supplies to dealers

Major national parks as well as major tourist attractions report adequate fuel supplies

Among major turnpikes only Oklahoma Turnpike reports limiting amounts of fuel sales

The OML says motorists should have few problems if they fill their tanks early in the day and on Saturdays to avoid common early evening and Sunday closings

Motorists are also advised to keep their fuel tanks above the half full mark and to limit extensive night and Sunday driving

Too much water – Park

DARLINGTON -- It looks like there will be no swimming at Darlington Provincial Park this year, says park superintendant Brian Swile

Swaile says lake levels have stabilized but have not begun to drop and as a result he is discouraging all swimming at the park this year

Patio living in an apartm

Most apartment dwellers have had to forego the pleasures of outdoor living backyard style for the sake of convenience

But Richard and Irene Schuldis, owners of Oshawa Appliance Parts Co., have created a garden atmosphere on the roof of the garage of their Simcoe Street South apartment.

They live in an apartment over their store and during the past year have turned a sundeck into a European terrace garden In a small area, about 25 feet square, they have created a number of activity centres - several informal sitting areas, a barbeque pit, a spacious picnic area, a games centre, a fountain and garden, and a large open area for sunbathing or dancing.

This sundeck isn't simply a sundeck. Schuldis has used barnwood and cedar shake to build walls around the deck

On one wall, he has created large imaginary windows decorated with planters and hanging flower pots On others, he's installed shutters to provide a flow-through breeze

The floor area has been painted green and eventually the couple intends to install indoor-outdoor carpeting

While there is no roof, in several areas Schuldis has built a lattice type of covering to provide some shade.

All available space has been used to best advantage, particularly in a step-up arrangement of flower boxes. Here the Schuldises have mixed real with a few artificial flowers to show some color early in the season

They have lived in the apartment above the store for three and a half years with their two teenaged children.

Schuldis did all the work himself on the terrace, taking great pains to ensure that all of the wood looked as old and attractive as possible by using several kinds of stain on each board

They have no cottage but like camping in Northern Ontario. Schuldis has created attractive collages of the natural items they have collected on their trips - fungus, ferns, pine cones, bark and so on

The walls are also decorated with reminders of the family's German origin

Schuldis came from the Blackforest area of Germany. The couple has been in Canada for 17 years and is now trying to create a little European nook right here in Oshawa

The result is an attractive and very liveable area that the couple is very proud of

Above or below-- matter of taste

People who want a swimming pool but don't want to dive right into the expensive in-ground variety are getting their feet wet by purchasing above-ground pools

Above-ground pools are an inexpensive alternative for people who want a pool but aren't sure how much they will use it, says Bill Hambly of Coral Pools, a company that specializes in concrete in-ground pools and also sells the above-ground variety

If the family finds it makes a great deal of use of the above-ground pool, it often comes back to invest in the more expensive and permanent in-ground type, he says

A large, luxury-style above-ground pool costs around $1,000, but a small one with a few extras sells for about $400.

This kind of pool can be put up in a day by three men, says Mike Myers of Major Pools, a manufacturer of vinyl liner pools in Oshawa

The exterior of above ground pools has improved over the years and now they no longer look like small reservoirs but attractive assets in anyone's back yard.

Many people install decks around the top to add to their convenience and versatility

Most are four feet deep or more and some are designed with flexible bottoms to permit excavation under the pool to provide a 'deep end'.

They come as long as 33 feet and as wide as 18 feet. The smallest are circular ones about 12 feet in diameter

Above ground pools can be equipped with all of the accessories of in-ground pools - heaters and filtration systems, pumps and vacuum kits, and so on

They can also be dismantled and moved along with the family

Hitachi's state-of-the-art receiver Designed and built on the Rolls-Royce principal...

The best of orthodox design, refined and prefected No compromise in quality Careful construction Quality control that borders on the fanatical That's what it takes to build "The best car in the world" It also produces a pretty outstanding stereo receiver

What makes a receiver outstanding? First its ability to pull in even weak FM/stereo broadcasts, strip away unnecessary noise and relay a clean, strong, steady signal to the amplifier section. Second, its ability to give a signal from broadcast record or tape source the power to drive a set of speakers without adding Harmonic Distortion or permitting the build up of Intermodulation Distortion The result is pure, natural sound and Hitachi's SR 1100 produces it to perfection

With features like crystal filters, monolithic IC's and figures like 1.6 micro volt sensitivity, 70dB S/N ratio, there's plenty to talk about at your Hitachi Dealer's

Pure, natural sound plus reliability the big Hitachi plus-factor

Swimming in a snowstorm is possible with bubble

If a person had a heater and a "Swimhut" for his swimming pool, he could swim in a snowstorm, says Stan Lukow.

Even if he didn't have a heater, he says, a person with a "Swimhut" could swim in his outdoor pool five months longer than a person without one

Lukow is the local distributor of Swimhuts, a vinyl dome or bubble that fits over a swimming pool and offers numerous benefits including allowing the owner to swim comfortably from March 1 to the middle of November

Swimhuts are custom-made for any pool with any shape. For the average 18 by 32 foot pool they cost between $1,000 and $1,200

The dome itself is made of sunshading, colored vinyl with the sides clear so swimmers can see out It has nylon reinforcing ribs which keep the material from stretching and is held down by a waterbag that goes all the way around the pool, plus anchor cords

"It can be put up in whatever time it takes to fill the waterbag with water says Lukow "It's really convertible and can be erected in 20 minutes

The dome can come with one or two doors, although Lukow says two doors are recommended to give the pool added air circulation

Lukow claims that the dome is better than a heater cost-wise because it will cost around $800 for the heater and $300 a year to run it. He says a person could buy a Swimhut and wouldn't have to pay for anything else

The dome not only provides protection against cold spring and fall winds, it also keeps the insects away and gives added protection from children straying into your yard and falling into your pool

Because the dust is kept away by the dome, Lukow says a person might only have to vacuum his pool twice a year

"You can swim at one o'clock in the morning and it's just beautiful," he says "No wind and no mosquitoes."

He says he and his brother got into the business after they "got sick and tired of using our pools for only a few months out of the year".

"If you tie up $10,000 in a pool you want to be able to get more than two months a year out of it " he says

To test one of the Swimhuts out, he says his brother left his up all winter long for two years and it's still in great shape

Because they are custom made for each individual pool, Lukow says it takes about four weeks for one to be delivered. He says they are made in the United States and are unique in Canada because they have just started to be sold here

He says he really doesn't bother advertising because the product has become known through word of mouth. But, if any one is interested he can be reached at 728-6665

Sailing allows Mike Kassinger to get away from traffic noises & ringing telephones

By Tom Douglas
Editor

Mike Kassinger got himself involved in an event four years ago that ended up costing him about $6,000.

But the funny part of it is, he doesn't mind a bit. In fact, he's very happy that he did.

What happened was that a friend of his was looking for someone to crew for him in a sailboat race. Mike who had never sailed before volunteered and from that moment he was hooked.

"I knew right then and there I just had to have a sailboat of my own.

It took him one year of planning and another two years of building, but his dream was finally realized this spring when he launched a 29-foot sloop.

It was a bit of a busman's holiday for Mike building his boat, because as vice-president of H. Kassinger Construction Ltd. of Oshawa, building is also his life's work.

He actually purchased a steel hull from an area boatbuilder and finished it off inside and out.

Mike isn't exactly sure how much it cost him altogether to get his boat into the water, but he figures it must be somewhere around $6,000.

"I started to keep careful track of expenses, but the bills started coming in so fast that I was afraid to know exactly how much it was costing," he said. "I finally gave up and decided I would just buy things when I could afford them."

The first year he was finishing off the boat, he used to go at it every night after work and all weekend long.

"Even in the winter, I had a plastic tarp over it and a small heater inside and I'd work away at it," he said.

The second year he was unable to spend as much time at it, but nevertheless was able to launch it this spring.

The boat's cabin sleeps four and has an amazing number of the comforts of home for the small space Mike had to work with. The occupants are able to stand up and walk about fairly freely and there's a two-burner alcohol stove, an icebox, a chemical toilet and a fair amount of storage space.

To most of us, used to the creature comforts of an apartment or house, the quarters might seem a little cramped, but to Mike Kassinger it's a second home.

"I love getting out on the lake to the point where all the noises of the city fade away," he said. "It's the greatest feeling in the world to have nothing but water around you and no sounds of traffic or factories or even a ringing telephone.

He dreams eventually of sailing to Tahiti where he'd meet expenses by chartering his boat to tourists.

Mike Kassinger (on mast) finished off this 29-foot sloop in his spare time after buying the steel hull from a boatbuilder. Seen with him is Irv Gill, owner of the Port Darlington marina where the boat is berthed.

These units carry the balance of Audi and Volkswagen factory warranty

Campers in regional parks won't have to hide their booze

The days when people will have to hide behind trees and wrap their bottles in towels for a nip of their favorite liquid refreshment while on a picnic will soon be gone

One benefit of regional government will be the sale of "spiritous fermented or intoxicating liquors" within regional parks and the subsequent right for eligible people to partake of such liquors

The Durham regional council has been given supervisory powers to permit the sale of spirits in all regional parks from year to year or for any period not exceeding 10 years

Liquor sales must abide by the rules and regulations of the Liquor Licence Act, but the regional council can also establish its own additional regulations

If the regional council moves quickly, it may just be able to establish bars and beer stands in regional parks before the hot summer days of 1974

Drinking laws

If you decide to have a barbecue picnic this weekend at an area park and you want to bring along a bottle of wine it's illegal

According to Oshawa police Det Trevor McCagherty an adult can drink in his own residence or the residence of a bonafide "donee"

You can also drink anywhere on your property or anywhere on the property where you're an invited guest, McCagherty says

You can't drink at a public park or at a beach he says

HELP WANTED

DO YOU LIKE CHILDREN?
Then Read About This Opportunity.

When is a child ready to learn to read? The sooner the better because reading is the skill by which all other skills are acquired. Our newest product helps parents help their preschool youngster. With magic books, delightfully illustrated a child learns the difference between a square and a circle, an "r" and an "n". His magic pen lights up to tell him the correct answer The child learns by "doing", not just observing. Reading, counting, distinguishing colours, shapes and sizes are all part of this wonderful program. Our established customers in the Oshawa area are anxious to see this new product.
One part-time person (choose your own hours) is required to visit them. Excellent income for helping very young children learn to learn.

Please write to Mr. K. L. Brown, Suite No. 711, 200 University Ave., Toronto.

SENIOR HIGH SCHOOL or COLLEGE STUDENTS

During the month of August, we will require a number of senior high school students or community college students for supervisory work with youngsters.
Following a brief training period and some full time work during August, students hired would continue their job part time while attending school during the other months of the year.
Write giving full particulars as to school grades, references, to File 378, This Week, 390 King Street West, Oshawa, Ontario.

There's More To Real Estate Than Just A License To Sell

Show that you're competent, remember enough to pass the government course examinations, put in the required effort and learning time and you can get a paper that officially calls you a real estate sales representative. But that's all it does, it doesn't guarantee you'll be a success that's entirely up to you.

At Young & Biggin we've taken steps to do more than just help you get a license. We're the first company in our field to install a closed circuit television system as part of our latest training program and we've secured exclusive Metropolitan Toronto rights to the best in-depth, video realty sales course ever produced $250,000 went into the development of the R.S.I. training system. Twenty hours of taped programs by the world's top experts are integrated with the live lectures and seminars

If you join our instruction program, you can study while earning a living in real estate. Y&B offers daytime courses or special night classes and it's absolutely free

If you are thinking of a career in the real estate business, with top commissions, you owe it to your future to speak with Jim Jameson about the unique Y & B training system

You can call him at 942-4751. YOUNG AND BIGGIN LTD., REALTOR

KILL FAIR — MAYOR

"Get rid of the fair," Mayor Jim Potticary told city council Monday.

The mayor was of course speaking about the Oshawa Fair, due to open Thursday at Alexandra Park.

"Why should we provide a site for Conklin (the Toronto-based carnival rides operator)?" Potticary asked councillors. "It's not an agricultural fair, it's for Conklin...to make a few bucks from. Let's get wise to the guy."

The mayor made the comments in agreement with a motion by Ald. Bruce McArthur that the city building inspector investigate and submit a report to council on the two structures used by the fair at the park.

"I'm sorry to say we own those. you can't call them buildings anymore. they're a disgrace to anyone," the mayor continued. "It's about time we tore down those disgraceful buildings and made a park for people in the area. It's about time we got rid of the skidoos and the motorcycles.

"Get rid of the fair, say goodbye to it and let's use that beautiful land."

McArthur's motion, although only to implement an investigation of the park buildings, was intended, the alderman said, to bring pressure on the Oshawa Fair Board to meet with council and consider a possible relocation site for the fair so the park could be used for entirely recreational purposes.

The mayor agreed, pointing out to the public that the buildings were unsafe, might prompt the board to consider relocating the fair.

"Those buildings would be condemned in three minutes if a building inspector saw them, and you know it," Potticary said.

Con. John McLaughlin, on the other hand, said he would not support such a nothing motion.

"We own everything there, the buildings and the land," McLaughlin said. "All we'd have to do is give them (the fair board) six months and they'll get out. We don't need a report and, if people didn't like the fair they wouldn't bring their children to it as I do."

Con. Christine Thomas disagreed with McLaughlin. She said it would not be as easy as he thought to get the fair to relocate. It was offered a free five-acre site by the government to move to and the board refused it, she said.

"But to have a second or third or even fourth look at it with the fair board would be very sound reasoning," she admitted. "They (the board) have to give their consent to get out of the park. They did not cooperate in the past, nor do I think they would do anything now."

When McArthur's motion was defeated Con. Thomas moved that council meet with the fair board to discuss another possible site for the annual event.

The motion was passed and it was decided to ask the board to meet with the board of control today.

You've got to look better to the public, Cliff Pilkey tells unions

Cliff Pilkey talks in depth about his long association with the United Auto Workers inside This Week. And by the way he denies that the reason he's looking over these tires at the Oshawa Harbor is in case they would be needed to keep union members warm during a long winter strike.

Optimism hopefully not misplaced

For those of us who felt the effects of the last General Motors strike, and there were very few of us who did not in some way, 1970 doesn't seem that long ago.

At that time, the area suffered through 67 days of strike action and it would be a foolish person indeed who would welcome such a period of hardship again.

That's why today is an important day for the people of this area since it marks the beginning of formal negotiations in Toronto between GM representatives and bargainers for the United Auto Workers.

An article elsewhere in this issue concludes that a spirit of optimism is present at the outset of the talks and we can only hope that this optimism is well-founded.

The sincerity of both sides has already been shown through a series of in-plant meetings to settle various local matters and thereby reduce the amount of bargaining time required in formal negotiations

Then, too, Abe Taylor, president of the UAW's Local 222 has stated publicly that he wishes to avoid a strike if at all possible. GM officials have issued similar statements

So all that remains is to urge bargainers for both sides to keep the well-being of the region in mind when they sit down to attempt a resolution of the various items still outstanding.

It may be a cliche to state that everybody loses during a strike, but it's too true to pass off as just another pat phrase

Keep out, Toronto

One short-sighted aspect of legislation creating the regional municipality of Durham is its failure to change the jurisdictions of conservation authorities

The act fails to bring conservation authority boundaries into line with those of the new region. As a result, not only will the Central Lake Ontario Conservation Authority continue to preside over conservation matters for Whitby, Oshawa, Darlington, Bowmanville, East Whitby and part of Clarke Township, but the Metropolitan Toronto Region Conservation Authority will be permitted to exert a strong influence over the western portion of the Durham Region

The danger in this lies in the fact that people outside the region will be able to make decisions that affect the lives of Durham residents and that in fact overrule decisions made by Durham people Conservation authorities have no direct responsibility to any electorate and have been given substantial powers by the provincial government to rule on municipal projects.

The provincial legislation controlling conservation authorities was designed to deliberately separate the conservation function from that of the municipal council function. Councils have been assigned jurisdiction over land development and receive their funding through property taxes and theoretically therefore, would not have conservation interests at heart.

That municipal councils are sincerely interested in conservation and its off-shoot recreation - has been proven time and again by their financial support of conservation authority projects and by their own expenditures for parks and recreation facilities.

Failure to realign the conservation authority boundaries to coincide with those of the region will undoubtedly result in inefficiencies and prevent the fulfilment of regional goals.

Whitby Council has already moved to line up other municipalities involved in the Durham Region to petition the province to create a single conservation authority for the region

If the province rejects this petition, it will be undermining the success of the region from the start. Such a denial would also substantiate indications that the Metro conservation authority wields tremendous power and may contine to do so to the disadvantage of the Durham Region.

Don Wright of the periodical Hydro News makes a comment on Women's Lib that bears repeating: "Headlines in an Ontario newspaper recently proclaimed the appointment of the local utility's first woman 'chairperson.' And this bizarre practice may be in danger of spreading. The trick here is to strive for neutral ground by substituting 'person' for 'man' wherever this no-no appears in a word. Thus we have 'manoeuvre' replaced by 'personoeuvre' and the euphonious 'mandolin' replaced by the horrendous 'persondolin'. Women themselves become wopersons and every female is a feperson. It sounds to us like a lot of horse personure

We common types who get exasperated at times with ths Canada Post Office for various reasons can perhaps take consolation in the fact that even our Liberal Members of Parliament are suffering as well. In the current Parliamentary report sent to his constituents in Ontario Riding, Norm Cafik apologizes for not sending earlier reports to some people in the riding: "I ... discovered much to my annoyance that over 5,000 people in the riding have never been included on my distribution list. The postal areas which have been left out by the post office in the past are listed below ..."

Small businessman can blame self for problems

by peter brouwer

Does the "small businessman" have the sympathy of the general public? I think not

It would be fair to say that he is perhaps even more maligned than the large corporation.

And it would also be fair to say that to a large extent it's his own fault

Witness then a few paragraphs from the House of Commons debate last week

Alastair Gillespie, minister of industry, trade and commerce: Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce important measures to further encourage and assist the establishment and growth of Canadian small business. As hon. members are well aware, Canada's smaller enterprises and entrepreneurs are fundamental to a future where we, as Canadians, gain greater domestic control over our own economic well-being We can rely less on others only be relying more on ourselves

Mr. Fairweather: Wow! Who wrote that?

Mr. Gillespie: The strength of our economy in the years ahead will depend to a large extent on the progress and growth of small business in Canada We want to assist that growth.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: It is obvious to me that hon. members opposite are less interested in small business than we are

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

An hon. member: What a statement

An hon. member: Not possible

Mr. Gillespie: If they will bear with me, Mr. Speaker, I would like to complete this statement about the government's position in respect of small business There are no simple or sweeping solutions to the needs of small business; certainly there is no single remedy. Ask the owner-manager of a small business what sort of help he would like from his government.

An hon. member: Less government.

Mr. Gillespie: And the chances are he will single out one of three things. He may say he wants to talk to someone about a technical or management problem, someone who knows what he is talking about

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: Second, how can he get financing for needed expansion or development of a good idea?

Some hon. member: Oh, oh!

An hon. member: How to win the west

Mr. Gillespie: I can hardly hear myself speak, Mr Speaker

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: How lucky can you get

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to make his statement

Mr. Gillespie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would appreciate the good will of the House

Third, it seems to me he may ask how he can get information on government programs of assistance without having to go to Ottawa - -

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: - - or without having to contact a lot of different departments of government. It is with these needs and objectives in mind that the government will introduce enabling legislation in the fall session to establish an independent Crown corporation to be called the Industrial Bank and Development Agency for Small Business

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: The new agency will incorporate the operations of the Industrial Development Bank. To its financing activities it will add additional services, in particular management services, technical services, training services, and program information services -- all at the local or regional level. Rather than create an additional and parallel institution, the government intends to build upon the existing strengths and organizational network of the IDB. But it also intends to extend the lending services currently offered by the IDB. However, I should like to make clear that the new agency will continue to provide financing only when it is not available from private lenders on reasonable terms and conditions

An hon. member: What else is new?

Mr. Gillespie: The IDB has operated as a subsidiary of the Bank of Canada, with the same board of directors as the central bank The independence of the new agency will be secured in law and by its own board of directors who with the president, will be appointed for fixed terms by the governor in council Its board will be chosen to reflect the regional interests of Canada, and the board will be assisted by regional advisory committees. The new agency will report to parliament through the minister of industry, trade and commerce

An hon. member: God help us

It soundsgood to me. But the proof of the pudding will be in the eating

Millhaven Motel

The old saw that there is one law for the rich and another for the poor came to mind last week following the publication of two crime-related stories in the Toronto Star

On one particular page of the paper, there was a story on the sentencing of employees of an off-track betting shop and another item about Maple Leaf Gardens president Harold Ballard.

The manager of the off-track betting shop was sentenced to a little over two years in jail for his "crime" while his employees were given correspondingly lighter sentences

The Ballard story concerned a press conference he had attended in Toronto while on a weekend pass from Millhaven prison. Ballard was sentenced late last year to three years in penitentiary for stealing $205,000 from Gardens shareholders.

At the press conference, Ballard joked about the "Millhaven Motel" and said Millhaven inmates eat better than most Canadian families. He also bragged about the business deals he's working on while in prison.

We can only hope that the betting shop manager, whose wrongdoing was that he accepted bets from people who willingly handed over the money to him and whose sentence is only a few months shorter than a man who stole $205,000 from an unwitting public, will find prison life as enjoyable as Ballard does.

A sneak preview of the news in 1980

PICKERING-- Harvey Pule, a spokesman for the People or Planes protest group, is recovering in Ajax-Pickering Hospital following a mishap here on the weekend.

Pule, one of the last remaining members of POP, suffered multiple fractures and abrasions when he was knocked to the tarmac by the jet exhaust of the first 747 to take off from the international airport here.

Pule and his group have refused to recognize the fact that the airport exists and had been living in a tent directly in front of the control tower.

TORONTO--Mr. and Mrs. James Depew were presented with the keys to their new home today by Housing Lottery Minister Jim Potticary

The lucky couple had their names drawn from a drum containing 147,000 entries from contestants hoping to win the right to purchase the one house built in the province during July.

The Depews have been saving for their dream home for the past 15 years and finally became eligible to enter the contest this month when their savings account reached the $30,000 level, the minimum down payment figure on the house.

UGANDA--President Idi Amin, in his final effort to cleanse this African nation of "misfits, imperialists and exploiters", exiled his seven wives and 39 children today.

"At last I have brought peace to this country," he shouted across the border at newsmen from the top of a banana tree.

President Amin is now the last known inhabitant of Uganda.

OTTAWA-- The National Energy Board has announced that Prince Edward Island has been selected as the province to receive the August allotment of gasoline.

An NEB spokesman cautioned residents of other provinces not to attempt to cross provincial borders to obtain any of the fuel since this would result in arrest and imprisonment. He said this had to be done to prevent riots and loss of life such as occurred in Alberta last month

The spokesman also announced that Canada's export of gasoline to the United States had once again broken all records during June.

SUVA, Fiji-- Elizabeth Taylor and Richard Burton arrived here in separate aircraft today in yet another attempt to reach a reconciliation.

A spokesman for the couple said that both were hopeful that their differences could be patched up.

He added that the two had agreed to continue working together and that details of their latest picture would be revealed at a press conference later today

The spokesman once again denied that the celebrated rift between the two was a publicity gimmick to shore up sagging careers and had nothing to do with the boxoffice success of their last movie: Richard and Elizabeth Meet The Frankenstein Monster.

WASHINGTON--President Spiro Agnew said today that there was no truth to the rumor that the United States had any intention of annexing Canada.

"While we admit that this country could use a little elbow room, the fact that we have deployed tanks and troops all along the Canadian border is mere coincidence," he said.

"They're simply there on manoeuvres."

Meanwhile, Prime Minister Ed Broadbent arrived back in Ottawa today from Washington with a copy of a Non-aggression treaty with the United States which he said would ensure "peace in our time."

DORAP project has LIP grant extended

Sir:

On behalf of the workers in the LIP program DORAP (Discharged and Outpatient Recreational Activities Program) and the patients of the Whitby Psychiatric Hospital, I would like to express our most sincere thanks for your effective efforts to have the program reinstated.

DORAP has been refunded until September 28. This has permitted an increase in staff which allows us to accept new referrals – patients about to be discharged who would benefit from an individual program with emphasis on resocialization and the use of community recreational facilities.

We are very glad to be able to further assist patients to adjust to life outside the hospital and thereby help the community in handling a difficult problem.

Thank you again for your gratifying interest and strong support.

Co-ordinator

Sir:

I recently had my driveway paved by Oshawa Quality Construction. The contract called for 690 square feet to be paved at a inch thickness after pressing. It was to cost $345, of which I have already paid $200

Following completion of the paving, the driveway was slanting very badly in some places making it drain very poorly. At the same time, I doubt very much if in some parts there is 2½ inches of asphalt.

According to my calculations, only 589 square feet have been paved.

I have complained to the company and would be satisfied if they would just level the driveway in some spots. It would only take a few shovelfuls of asphalt.

The only response from the company is that they want the $100 I owe them What can I do?

Art Rutter,
Oshawa.

This Week was unable to contact the company agent who drew up the contract with Mr. Rutter. However, we informed the provincial Consumer Protection Bureau about Mr. Rutter's problem and a spokesman there says the bureau can help. If Mr. Rutter would write to the bureau explaining the problem and enclose a copy of the contract, it will look into the matter. The bureau is at 555 Yonge Street, Toronto, MY4-1Y7, Ontario.

Sir:

My neighbor has nine monkeys. This may seem a good laugh but actually they are a filthy nuisance, since their droppings make a mess of the ground. He lets them run loose even though they should be caged.

I have phoned the health department and they agreed they should be caged, but so far they have not been. I phoned the city and was told there is no bylaw to prohibit these pets in a commercially-zoned area.

The monkeys have even attacked my dog, and I have spoken to my neighbor twice about the problem they are creating but with no result. Can you do something about this.

Mrs. Janis Streics
Oshawa

This Week called city hall to find out what could be done about the problem, and as you know, sent both a reporter and photographer to your home to verify it.

We agree that monkey-shines can be a nuisance and apparently so does city hall. You'll be glad to know that your neighbor has been given the word to part with his frolicksome pets.

Note of optimism marks beginning of General Motors talks

A spirit of optimism that a strike this fall may be avoided apparently pervades the start of negotiations in Toronto today between representatives of General Motors and the United Autoworkers Union

While the present three-year contract does not expire until Sept 14 union and company officials have been meeting for the past six months to settle a number of local in-plant matters in an effort to reduce the amount of bargaining time required in formal negotiations

Both GM and UAW spokesmen have issued statements that they wish to avoid a strike if at all possible

However Dennis McDermott, Canadian director of the UAW, has made it clear that a Canadian subsidiary of one of the big three automakers may be the target for pattern — setting strike action if U S wage controls interfere with achieving the goals of Canadian workers

Canadian workers will refuse to accept any inhibitions placed on bargaining in the United States by wage and price controls, says McDermott adding he feels Canadian autoworkers will be able to win wage increases despite the situation south of the border

The UAW appears to place prime importance in this set of negotiations on making the workplace more comfortable and attractive for autoworkers while maintaining wage parity with their counterparts in the U S

Autoworkers continue to strive for a 30-and-out-clause in the new agreement to permit workers with 30 years' seniority to retire at full benefits The present contract allows a 30-year man to retire at the age of 58

The UAW in Canada is looking for a formula that will maintain wage parity with U.S. workers throughout the life of the contract

Both countries have had base wage parity for the past six years, but the U.S has a higher cost of living allowance that has put GM workers in the States 11 cents ahead of their Canadian counterparts at the end of the contract

Autoworkers now average about $5 80 an hour in wages and up to $3 an hour in fringe benefits, according to the industry Assemblers get $4.51 an hour, plus 29 cents more in Canada for cost of living. In the U.S. the cost of living allowance is 40 cents

Perhaps the touchiest issue in this set of negotiations is the union demand that overtime be a voluntary condition

The manufacturers assert that the men want all the overtime they can get and argue that a voluntary overtime system is too cumbersome and inefficient

The unions on the other hand stress that a worker commits only a normal work week to his job and not his whole life. It is the mandatory aspect of overtime the workers object to, say UAW spokesmen, not to overtime itself

UAW Local 222 president Abe Taylor has been calling for a peaceful settlement since the last agreement was reached in 1970 after a 67-day strike in Oshawa and other Canadian GM plants

Last week too, the top bargainer for GM Canada, Arnold Stapleton told community leaders GM is hopeful there will be no strike this year

GM employs 28,000 people in Canada, of which 15,000 work in Oshawa

The 1970 strike cost the company $90 million each day in sales, according to General Motors

Spring is election time in Canada say politicians

The experts say a federal election next spring

Officials of all three local party associations predict another federal election during the first six months of 1974

In the absence of Oshawa-Whitby NDP association president Mike Breaugh, Cliff Pilkey, local publicity officer, says although there is a possibility of a fall election, one in the spring "seems much more likely."

The area NDP are geared for that election Pilkey says and in fact, the party hasn't really stopped since the last one

"We are ready to roll at a moment's notice," he says

Pilkey predicts there will be no change in the Liberal Miority government situation following a new election except that the NDP will gain more seats

"There will be no Liberal majority, but I think the people will continue to support a Liberal minority which is more conducive to good legislation and government," Pilkey claims "There has been more progressive legislation in this Parliament than in the previous one."

Mike Lisko, president of the Oshawa-Whitby Liberals, sees an election being called in March or April of next year

"It will probably be called as a result of a vote on the budget," he says. "I think the opposition parties will feel it is the right time to use some issue to defeat the government. But, then again, that will depend on whether we have a prosperous winter"

Lisko, says the Liberals will hold a nomination convention right after the national Liberal convention in September, or early in the new year

Lisko has a hunch the election won't be called until spring so most MPs will have a minimum of six years in Parliament which, in case they lose the election, will entitle them to an MP's pension

"I think that's something in the back of their minds," he says, "but I doubt if that will stand in the way of defeating the government if the opposition parties feel strongly about something to do it before spring. It wouldn't justify prolonging the situation."

John Muha, Conservative association president, says he doesn't think the government will be ready, either strategically or financially, for an election before next spring

The government will try to hold on as long as they can," he says "They're just not ready and neither are many ridings There is no financing. The last election was a real drain and it will take time to build up those funds again"

Muha says that the Montreal Star has reported that former Conservative prime minister John Diefenbaker has somehow found out that the returning officers around the country have already received election kits and are preparing for an election

Actually, he says, he would like to see an election come sooner than spring

"I'd like to see it come sooner because I don't like the current balance of power that the NDP are enjoying," he says "They're not abusing it... minority government is working, but I don't like the fact that they have that little bit of power"

Muha says if there is an election this spring, the Conservatives will be ready. Former Oshawa-Whitby MP and Conservative candidate Mike Starr has said he will not seek the nomination. His party will hold a nomination convention Oct. 21 at St Gregory's Auditorium to select a new PC candidate

Slimy swim

Tammy Friesen, 9, of Oshawa finds it hard to believe that anyone would swim in the slimy waters of Oshawa Beach at Lakeview Park, but people still ignore warning signs posted there and go for a dip.

White ponders which hat

The big blue machine searching for possible federal candidates in Oshawa and Whitby, is trying to recruit Whitby Councillor Bob White

The request from the Oshawa-Whitby Conservative Association to stand for the nomination hit White, he says, "like a bolt out of the blue

White, who has been a Whitby councillor for six years, has not decided his political future but says he will make a decision on whether to seek the nomination while he is on his holidays during the next few weeks

"I'm very honored to be approached and considered," he says, admitting that previously he hadn't considered himself ready to move into another political sphere

The councillor stresses that he firmly intends to continue his political involvement but he has to make a choice now between involvement in regional politics and federal politics

"It appears now that I have to decide one way or the other"

As chairman of the planning board, White has been intensely involved in time-consuming preparation of Whitby's new official plan

Many things have to be considered in the decision, he says, including his family's feelings and his relationship with his employer White works in the customs department of General Motors in Oshawa

Whatever happens, he says, he will be very critical of any candidate at any level who doesn't provide the time that the elective office demands

"I've worked too damned hard and seen too many people who don't give the time the job demands to put up with that kind of thing," he says

Free bus ride ties in with downtown sidewalk sale

Oshawa's downtown merchants have hired all of the buses in the city to bring shoppers to the biggest-ever sidewalk sale Thursday and Friday, July 26 and 27

Shoppers will ride free on the early bird express Thursday, July 26 between 9 15 a m and 10 45 a m so they will be able to take advantage of the opening day specials

Organized by the Downtown Oshawa Association the sidewalk sale will feature demonstrations by the fire department on Simcoe Street between King and Athol, an auto show on Prince Street in front of Bond Towers, a display by the Oshawa Police and the Ontario Provincial Police in front of the police station, and an art display by the Oshawa and District Art Association on Richmond Street

Ontario Street and Celina Street between King and Athol will be closed off during the two days for a display of motors, motorcycles, travel trailers and campers

On Friday, a draw will be made for a "Win a trip to Florida" contest

Artists interested in participating in the art show are asked to call Karl Blakolmer, chairman of the retail committee (579-1242) and Mrs. K Millard, president of the ODAA (725-8015)

GM tours ended for model year

General Motors of Canada has ended its public and special tours of its South Plant operations for the 1973 model year

Suspension of the tours is due to the beginning of the plant vacation period, followed by tooling and changeover activities related to the 1974 GM of Canada models, a spokesman said

Plant tours will resume following new car announcements in the fall Since November, 1972 some 49,000 people have toured GM of Canada plant facilities in Oshawa

Most of the visitors came as individuals, but groups can tour the passenger car assembly plants by advance arrangement with the public relations department

Broadbent takes potshots at builder, Ayn Rand and This Week

Sir

I read with a mixture of consternation and amusement Mr Herman Kassinger's letter which appeared in the July 11 issue of your paper

Mr. Kassinger castigates me for issuing what he describes as "bland statements". Mr. Kassinger's letter was not of course bland. Neither was it factual, logical or reasonable

It is normally refreshing to read the opinions of a man working in a particular field. I would have hoped that Mr Kassinger as a developer, would have taken the opportunity to shed some light on the serious housing problem faced by Canadians throughout the country

Instead, he merely emoted the bizarre economic theories which have been disowned by all serious economists for the past four decades

My guess is that he has come under the pernicious influence of the adolescent's favored right wing 'philosopher' Ayn Rand, and has not yet emerged from the mystified amalgam which she passes off as serious thought

On this point it is perhaps worth noting that a few years ago I customarily assigned one of Miss Rand's books to my first year university students for review purposes. Without exception, the more able students whether conservative, liberal or socialist, quickly saw through the windy prose which she claimed was philosophy

I would like to deal briefly with the few matters of substance that I was able to discern in Mr Kassinger's outburst

I pointed out in my speech that there was a scarcity of money available for mortgages at interest rates which average people could afford

Mr Kassinger misconstrued this unarguable fact and claimed that I had asserted merely that there was little mortgage money available. He then proceeded with some curious economic theory to try to demonstrate how money is obtained by banks and then made available to borrowers

The point, Mr. Kassinger, is that there is no money available that an average-income Canadian can afford to borrow at present mortgage rates. It is unfortunate that Mr. Kassinger didn't deal with the reason for this

I pointed out in my speech that left to market forces too much investment goes into sections of the economy other than housing and if we are to get sufficient funds for housing the federal law needs to be changed, making it mandatory that the banks and trust companies set aside a certain percentage of their annual investment for mortgage purposes at an interest rate that the average person can afford, i.e. in the neighborhood of six or seven per cent

If Mr. Kassinger disagrees with this—which was the main point of my speech—why doesn't he say so?

Although I said almost nothing about developers in my speech—and was therefore surprised by the misleading headline selected by the editor of This Week—it is perhaps worth noting that contrary to what Mr Kassinger suggest, many developers have been among those who have caused housing prices to go up

I refer to those developers who are also land speculators (I suspect Mr. Kassinger knows a few of them, some of them have been known even to reside in Oshawa)

The fact is that present federal taxation laws permit land speculators to have reduced taxes on their land even when no work is done on that land This law serves to encourage the holding of land for speculation purposes instead of for development of houses

What we need and the NDP will be proposing this, at its convention in Vancouver during the present week, is a taxlaw which increases the amount of tax on speculatively-held land with each year that it is held back from development

Such a law would soon lead to an increase in the supply of housing stock. Does Mr. Kassinger disagree with this?

Mr Kassinger contends that interest charges on mortgages are low when compared with interest paid on other kinds of loans. Isn't that touching?

The point is that for anyone who is more concerned about housing than profits, housing must be seen to be a social necessity—i.e. a house is not a commodity just like any other commodity

We in the NDP believe that interest rates on mortgages should reflect this difference in principle We believe it is wrong that a man must have to pay more than $30,000 in interest charges in order to provide a home for his wife and children

It is for this reason that we believe it is necesary to require the banks and trust companies to bring down their interest rates on mortgages. Does Mr. Kassinger disagree with this or does he believe a house is just like any other commodity?

Mr. Kassinger concludes his letter by criticizing me for merely "criticizing" If he had taken the trouble to read local newspapers recently or the debates of the House of Commons—not to mention the two most recent newsletters I sent out to the whole community—he would have discovered a number of policy suggestions

However, since Mr. Kassinger has obviously been too busy to read recently, I have mailed to him under separate cover, some copies of recent speeches on the subject of housing.

Perhaps in the future he will take the time to avoid rhetoric and deal with substance

Edward Broadbent, MP

Glad extension cancelled

Sir:

Re the John Street Eulalie Avenue extension

Your report on this extension of July 11 for an east-to-west artery, it would be east to Wilson Road and west to the shopping centre only

One alderman has stated that there are thousands of people wanting to go to the centre on this road Where are the thousands of people coming from and how are they getting to the shopping centre now?

The people on this street have to get to the centre too, but don't need a million dollar road to get to it

I wonder how many people know where Eulalie Avenue is outside of looking at a map

Mr. Pilkey should know what it would do to this street, Cutting off their front porches because I believe he lived on the street at one time

I think you would find that over half the taxpayers on this street are widow's or on fixed income (pensions). They would have to seal up the front of the house in order to keep out the noise of traffic and the dust from the road.

The buses alone are running approximately every half hour and there would be five or six tracks to go over past the Fitting's property. and a race track type curve to reach it.

Read the book!

Sir:

In regard to the letter of Mr Dennis Hawkridge replying to Mr. Bob Kirkland's article on hair pollution, it seems to me that Mr. Hawkridge has missed the point of the article, which was whether or not people can use the Lord Jesus Christ as proof positive that men can wear their hair long

I think Mr. Kirkland made it perfectly clear that according to the Bible and according to natural history, Jesus Christ did not have long hair and that the religious pictures only convey the artist's conception of Christ and are not accurate

It is unfortunate that Mr. Hawkridge took this article as a personal attack on him. I am sure that Mr. Kirkland didn't intend to hurt his sensitive feelings but was merely trying to "set the record straight"

I sympathize with Mr. Hawkridge in the persecution he has suffered over the length of his hair. I know the feeling of attacks of this sort as many Christians do — the name-calling (fanatic, bigot, hatemonger) and the character assassination.

But don't you think, Mr. Hawkridge, it is a far better thing to be attacked for a person (the Lord Jesus Christ) you stand for, than for such a stupid thing as the length of one's hair?

As for Mr. Kirkland's use of the words "vile and shame" in regard to the length of a man's hair, they are not his words, they are God's, spoken through the Apostle Paul.

They were written to believers for their instruction, not to non-believers. As far as the unbeliever is concerned, God is most anxious that the relationship between himself and man may be restored, which was broken by sin

God made available to all men access to Himself through the death and resurrection of His son. All one has to do for reconciliation is accept the gift he has provided

And so, Mr. Hawkridge, I invite you to read the book. The movie is a pale imitation

Praises Oshawa police

I'd like, through your newspaper, to say a sincere thank you to the Oshawa Police for the control of roads and traffic performed during the recent Ontario Games.

Long hair fan

Sir:

If Dennis S. Hawkridge were to phone me, he may find out that at least one would not condemn him because of long hair

I do not put people down

A man is known by what he does to others, not what he controls that would lead to put downs, and in some cases to homicide and quarrels

However, Mr. Hawkridge and I have something in common - MUSIC

I could show him something he could use the rest of his life

Builder given the bird

Sir:

May I commend you on the bold headline in last week's This Week, "Builder hammers Broadbent on family misery". Mr. Kassinger's comments deserved your typical deceptive acceretion

Mr. Kassinger's chastisement of Ed Broadbent's statement appears more of a defence of the free enterprise system than a believable literary entity

Our free enterprise system is presently falling apart at its seams. Food prices have skyrocketed, up in excess of 16 per cent in one year. Clothing prices have recently joined the movement with dramatic price increases forecast for the coming year

Need we comment on housing prices? Surely someone must be to blame!

Free enterprisers constantly defend the system which allows an already critical situation to get further out-of-hand. And what could be more critical than soaring prices on necessary commodities?

As regards housing costs, one positive step would be to tax speculative profits on land at a rate of 100 per cent. Developers intent on allowing land to lay idle while supply and demand force the price skywards should lose their licences to operate in Ontario

Developers who two months after completing a subdivision and having set prices decide that their products are worth $5,000 more should be jailed Controls are urgently required

Typically, free enterprisers defend their actions by rationalising that to invoke stringent controls results in a lessoning of incentive Hogwash! Were it not for the resources available in Canada, they would be exploiting the populace somewhere else

To alleviate the need for government intervention co-operation between entrepreneurs and local, provincial, and federal legislators is the order of the day.

ALLERGENS ARE AN AIRBORNE MENACE

For many people with allergies, just the thought of the outdoors can bring on a feeling of dread. Airborne pollen can mean hours of suffering. To reduce exposure to allergens here are a few helpful hints

Humid weather and evenings are usually a more comfortable time as a great many plants discharge their pollen in the morning and on dry days. Avoid wash that is hung outside as damp material will trap pollens. Outside pets will often carry pollen in their coats. If, in spite of all precautions, an allergic reaction occurs, remember that there are numerous medicines available that can offer relief

"A great many people have chosen us to be their personal family pharmacy. We consider this trust a privilege and a duty, and will do all we ethically can to live up to it. We welcome requests for delivery service".

Parochialism to go in Durham Region in 10 years

In the next 10 years, the Durham Region will develop into the major urban centre from a disjointed group of parochial municipalities, predicts John Kruger

Industrial and residential development will centre on the Oshawa-Whitby growth node, Kruger believes, leaving a buffer zone between Durham and Toronto in the Pickering Township area

The region will be criss-crossed with multi-modal transportation corridors

The Oshawa-Whitby area will be facing the urban problems that accompany ultra-high density development, he says, as Toronto has discovered

In the first 10 years, the Durham Regional Council will concentrate on providing the hard services - essential sewers and watermains to guide development to certain parts of the region, major roads and transit systems, including Highway 407 and the international airport in Pickering.

But in future decades, the region will tackle improving the soft services - social, recreational and cultural facilities and programs

"I expect a vitality to develop in Oshawa that cannot be anticipated today," says Kruger

While Oshwa, Whitby, Pickering, Ajax and so on will maintain a firm identity, residents of the region will be committed to the promise and results of regionalization, he says

By the end of the first decade, the North Pickering Community will come to be and there will be a number of exciting developments in this innovative experiment planners all over the continent are watching, says the executive director of Metro.

The region will be very citizen-conscious, he says, and will respond to the urban needs its new urban population brings with it

"People will be less parochial and will look at them selves as part of a huge megalopolis stretching from Hamilton to Newcastle

To quicken citizen interest in the region, it will be forced to provide the cultural and recreational outlets the residents require says Kruger, so they won't have to travel outside of the region for entertainment

"If the region is successful in preserving the quality of life that makes it unique now, then this region will be a very enjoyable place to live."

Politics will be different in 10 years' time too, he predicts

By that time, a woman, through extra diligence and ability, may be able to become the regional chairman. Once elected, a female chairman would probably be enormously successful by dint of her special talents and her patience, he believes

A wider variety of people will be interested in municipal office, he says. Elected offices will pay well and younger people and people who are ready to make municipal politics their career will emerge on the political scene

"And the relationship between the citizen and his government," says Kruger, "is going to be very very visibly that municipal governments are doing things with people rather than for them."

To achieve this stage will be very painful experience, he expects, perhaps more difficult than in any other region

The birth pains may be horrendous and the labor prolonged, but the offspring will be worth it, says Kruger

John Kruger, executive director of Metro Toronto, says the Durham Region in 10 years will be a major urban centre

Power for power's sake is not Kruger's bag

By Linda Sutton
Staff Writer

John Kruger is a man who likes the challenge and responsibility of power although he says he's not interested in power for power's sake

In the two years that he has been assistant to the Metro chairman, Kruger has rapidly built up his own position of influence within the large Metro organization For some time he has been the power behind the throne, the administrator of Metro in effect although not in title

Now he has the title to go with it. Yesterday, Metro council appointed him executive director, a quasi-political position that carries with it the responsibility for co-ordinating departmental policies and formulating policies

As a former Pickering Township councillor and president of the West Rouge Ratepayers' Associations for many years, Kruger is an unusual civil servant in view of his concern for citizen input into municipal government.

He's a champion of the little man in his fight against city hall. But he would prefer to see a spirit of co-operation between council and citizen rather than confrontation

In fact, he believes the only way for a government to operate is to achieve the input of the public right from the conceptual stage of any program or policy

Kruger soon has to make up his mind which of the options open to him he will pursue in the next stage of his career

His close ties with Pickering are the basis of a strong attraction to the Durham Region, and he would like in some way to be involved in its future development

This could mean a move for him from West Rouge, which will become part of Scarborough as of Jan. 1 1974, into Pickering Township

"I'm looking at the situation in Pickering Township quite carefully," he says, "as to whether or not I will run for mayor, and I'm weighing the sacrifices involved"

A man of recognized talents who enjoys being at the centre of activity and decision-making, Kruger has many options open to him, administratively and politically at both the provincial and regional levels

However, he's a Liberal and not prepared to switch parties for the sake of smoothing his way to a new job

Kruger has already resigned as president of the West Rouge Ratepayers' Association to avoid a conflict with his administrative positionand will remain on as a director until the association's September elections in which he will not run.

Issues will be decided by flick of a switch

Citizen participation in municipal government will be so well-established in 10 years' time, that people will be able to vote on council issues by simply pressing a button attached to their TV sets, says John Kruger

He predicts regional council meetings will be televised live and that it will not be uncommon for the regional chairman to stop the meeting and appeal to the people watching to express their opinion on an issue of pressing that button which is keyed into a centralized computer system

Within seconds, says the executive director of Metropolitan Toronto, the regional council will have an indication of citizen preferences

Citizens within the Durham Region are already beginning to demand a voice in decision-making, recognizes the director and former president of the West Rouge Ratepayers' Association

Shortly after the region is actually established, Kruger foresees citizen activity mounting to Toronto levels

Citizen interestis going to revolutionize the nature of municipal administration he believes

Citizens will demand and councils will have to give them the right to be involved in projects and policies right from the conceptual stage

No longer will municipal politicians and bureaucrats be able to play the all-wise father role of formulating policies, throwing out a finished product to the public for comment, then accepting or rejecting those comments

"Social forces are always much in advance of legislation," he points out

Top quality staff is essential or Durham Region will flounder says Kruger

A strong chairman and a skillful administrator who can organize the regional staff into a team are essential ingredients in the success of the Durham Region, says John Kruger

In Metro, Kruger plays the 'skillful administrator' role in his job as executive director and sees himself as a politician-technocrate

A high level of adminstrative expertise will be required to undertake the operation and development of the region, he says

A key element of the staffing appointments is the necessity of the senior staff members having close ties with provincial and federal officials

Sudbury has been able to do so much so quickly is because the chairman was formerly an Ontario deputy minister who know everyone at Queen's Park and a lot of people in Ottawa, says Kruger

The top administrative personnel have to form a tight, dynamic group of people, he advises, and says the leader of that group has to have an identifiable public personality as well.

"The regions that really work have the chairman looking after the political scene and an administrator who's quite dynamic and can create a team."

Unless top people are hired for the major posts, he says, "the region will flounder"

Kruger advises that the regional council may be wise to seek people for the top jobs outside of the region

All too often, the existing municipal administrators have built themselves empires, he says, and everybody winds up jockeying for position

"Sometimes it is astute to select staff people who are not tied to any of these camps," he says

The regions vary in their approach to administering a region, Kruger notes.

Sudbury has been organized strong managerial lines with few committees and a strong emphasis on council's policy role

At the opposite end of the spectrum is the Niagara region where there are many committeeswhich have little time for doing forward thinking, he says

Kruger expects the organization of the Durham Region to be similar to that of Niagara with a chairman who is basically a coordinator, an administrator who is a policy-maker, and plenty of committees

It is important that the regional chairman select an administrator whose strengths and weaknesses mesh with his weaknesses and strengths, suggests Kruger

Pilkey the paperboy

Union members got two cents' worth - wanted three in return

The first contact Cliff Pilkey had with the United Auto Workers' union was in 1937. He delivered papers to strikers at the picket line

"I was 15 years old then," Pilkey recalls "That was the strike that brought about the CIO(Congress of Industrial Organizations). The paper was two cents a copy then and the strikers would give me a nickel and tell me to keep the change After the first week they'd give me a nickel and want the three cents back"

Pilkey is now in the U A W. Toronto executive and has recently been appointed director of the citizenship and legislative department

"I came out of school when the war started and applied for a job in the 'boys' group' at GM and was hired," he says "You didn't get men's wages in the boy's group They hired you at 18 years old and you had to stay until you were 21 If I remember correctly I got 47 cents an hours

But, two years later Pilkey went to Toronto and enlisted in the army He later became a motor vehicle instructor at an army training school in Woodstock

"I joined the service Sept. 5, 1942," he says "I remember that date because 20 days later I got married

He came back to work at General Motors in 1946, but he didn't really become active in the union until 1949

There was a wildcat strike that year that lasted 22 days, and I guess it just made me conscious of the union

In 1950 he was elected as an in-plant committee man and in 1951 he was on the negotiating committee In 1954 he was elected as full-time secretary-treasurer of Local 222 and finally, in 1957, he was elected president of the local

One guy wanted to know if I would go to a meeting of union activists one night and I did," he says, trying to recall how he first got involved in the trade union movement

After that it all sort of fell into place I didn't really have any real objective at any time

It was union politics that gradually motivated Pilkey into more and more community participation. He was president of the Oshawa Labor Council for 10 years and was a city councillor for four years before being elected to the Legislature in 1967 for Oshawa on the New Democratic slate He was defeated in the 1971 election by Dr Charles McIlveen and is currently a city alderman

'The union skullduggery and politicking hasn't changed much, it's always there as certain factions emerge," he says "Union politics is mostly predicated on personalities as opposed to any real issues. The issues are centred around economic goals and working conditions "

Pilkey beheves that the average line-worker member of the U.A W cares about what is going on in the union's executive and has a basic understanding of the goals it is trying to reach for his benefit

Each U.A.W. member pays two hours of his pay rate per month to the union There are an estimated 11,000 U A W members in Oshawa alone. The are 120,000 members in Canada and 1.25 million members internationally

"The average union member doesn't really know precisely how it all works, but I think he cares about what's going on and has a basic understanding Pilkey says. "We'll be completely Canadian-oriented in the very near future, so he will gain a better insight into what s going on in the Canadian hall

Although Pilkey admits that every organization becomes a bureaucracy, he says the average U A W member has easy access to the local and international union. In this area, he says a member with problems can visit a subregional office at the Oshawa Shopping Centre

Part of Pilkey's job, according to U.A W constitution, is to work to preserve the "social and economic conditions of a U.A W member and his family and the general welfare and democratic way of life for all people

Pilkey says the citizenship part of his new duties is to co-operate with community groups in a community effort to make a better life for all people where the program of those groups have the same objectives as the U A W

As the union's new political expert, Pilkey will work with 55 locals throughout Canada. He says he will be keeping "a close eye" on federal, provincial and U S legislation to see how it will affect union members, and perhaps make recommendation for seeking legislative reform

UAW his life's work

Cliff Pilkey, who has just been appointed director of the citizenship and legislative department of the United Auto Workers, has spent most of his working life dealing with union affairs. He says the trade union movement must improve its public image.

Pilkey won't run provincially in 1975 unless...

Cliff Pilkey's political views are products on his childhood during the depression, he says

'I was active in politics long before the NDP emerged onto the scene, he says "In 1943 I cast my first vote I wasn t sophisticated about the issues I just thought whoever was governing the country was doing a poor job and I was determined to support any one who would change that I voted CCF."

Pilkey is the first to admit that his childhood environment was an obvious factor which helped shape his political affiliations and outlook on life

"I came from a poor family," says the life-long Oshawa resident "My father was subject to relief rolls and I saw first-hand the degrading handouts He used to take me down to the auto museum which was then the relief store We'd carry home the week's groceries in my wagon "

"I had to go to the principal for school books because my parents couldn't afford them. It was dehumanizing But, I went through that, and when I got old enough to think about it, I was determined it wasn't going to happen to me or my children

Pilkey says he doesn't remember any political discussion before his first vote. Voting CCF, he says, was just a natural reaction to his former environment

Between 1948 and 1964 Pilkey campaigned for the CCF party until it became known as the NDP. The Conservative candidate took the provincial seat in 1964, and in 1967, Pilkey decided to seek the NDP nomination

About 30,000 votes were cast during the election and Pilkey came out with a 2,000-vote majority. In the next election he gained 3,300 votes over his last figure but he still lost to current Oshawa MPP Charlies McIlveen, another Conservative

'I tried to be realistic and prepare myself for the loss " he says "Politics is a risky business anyway so I wasn't completely taken aback when I did lose."

Pilkey says he may seek a local seat as a municipal representative but not as a regional councillor during the forthcoming regional election. He says he will not seek the provincial nomination in 1975

"I really have no aspirations for the provincial candidacy," he says "But that doesn't mean all my options are closed It would depend on a series of things If there wasn't a credible candidate, I might consider it, but then I would have to consider my current union assignment On a balance, I would not be a candidate "

Pilkey says contrary to what some people think, he did not seek his spot on council just to keep his name in front of the public in case he decided to run provincially

"I saw being an alderman as a method of being involved in community life which I like," he says

On the political front, Pilkey says although the NDP will come to power eventually, they will not gain federal power until they take Ontario

The conditions that would have to exist before the NDP could take over would be normal economic conditions, but with a lack of housing, a threat of an energy shortage, abnormal taxation and restrictive health care, he says. All of which are beginning to surface, he maintains

If there was an extreme economic downfall or another depression, he is sure the electorate would turn to fascism

He is not afraid to admit he is a socialist

"People say they are NDP but not socialists," he says. "It's all a question of semantics anyway. If you're a socialist, an NDP a social democrat or a democratic socialist, it's all the same You're looking for a change that will provide a better distribution of the revenue that makes the tax structure and you want a say in the quality of life."

Trade unions must improve their public image says Pilkey

The trade union movement will have to do a better job to improve its poor public image, says Cliff Pilkey

Pilkey, the United Auto Workers' union citizenship and legislative director, says that the labor movement is currently being charged "with every evil in society and it's not a fair assessment "

"I think the trade union movement as a whole has to do a better job to improve that view," Pilkey says "The story has to be told about who are the true authors of our problems "

The image of the U A.W. throughout the country, says Pilkey is that it happens to be one of the better unions in terms of its democratic process where workers have greater access to leadership

"The U A W is seen as a union with a social conscience because it gets involved in many endeavors outside the structure of the trade union tradition," he says. "When people who are criticizing trade unions are asked what they think of the U A.W , their normal reaction is: 'We're not talking about the U A W

Perhaps one of the reasons why the U A.W has a better image than other unions is because it encourages its members to participate in all facets of the community in which they live, says Pilkey

"It is the government at the moment, and not the trade unions which is the wrong-doer he charges "It is also the multinational organizations whose decisions are not compatible with the well being of the total nation."

He claims the monopolistic enterprises are the real culprits in the inflation spiral and it is not caused by wage increases gained by workers

The U.A.W., he says, is now involved in a series of community programs and is very diversified in its social services program

Its major job, of course, is to continue to build on a set of principles that were established over the years such as greater economic progress and more leisure time for its members, he says

But on the whole, he doesn't see any significant problems that the U A W is faced with and cannot overcome

"Perhaps one of our problems would be communications," he says, "but we will be doing a better job in the near future Even my job is to get the union to be more aware of the legislative problems that are facing workers "

Bush collection

A showing of works by Canadian artist Jack Bush from the Robert McLaughlin Gallery's permanent collection began Tuesday

Described by critics as one of the best living painters, Bush's collection runs from the mid 50's through the early 70's including the watercolor, November number 9, an important turning point in Bush's artistic development

On display also with his paintings, will be a few of Bush's serigraphs, which explore the relation of a large area of a single hue to a series of areas of differing hues

Durham leaders ready to do battle on conservation power

Municipal leaders of Durham are preparing to launch their first battle as a team against the provincial government.

Four out of six chief magistrates in the lakefront municipalities are in favor of petitioning the provincial government to establish a single conservation authority for the new region, to be established Jan 1, 1974

Whitby Mayor Des Newman is spearheading opposition to the way conservation authorities have been treated in Bill 162, the piece of legislation that makes the region law

The act provides for no change to the present conservation authorities, resulting in the continuing influence of the Metropolitan Toronto Region Conservation Authority in Ajax and Pickering The Central Lake Ontario Conservation Authority will maintain its jurisdiction over conservation matters for Whitby, Oshawa, East Whitby, Darlington, Bowmanville, and a portion of Clarke Township

Super-authority

"The matter," says Newman, "is a question of a super-regional authority The Metro conservation authority has considerable financial support at the provincial level and will be able to take considerable action even the region can't do."

The influence of the MTRCA could undermine the effectiveness of planning decisions made by the regional council, the Whitby mayor feels

Since the conservation authorities have such substantial powers, he says permitting a body controlled by people outside the region to continue to exercise authority within the region is an intolerable situation

Newman points out the members on the conservation authority are not even directly responsible to the electorate

Conservation authority boundaries must be coincident with those of the Durham region, he says, and the municipal heads of the other CLOCA members agree with him

'Conservation authorities have a tremendous strength," says Oshawa Mayor Jim Potticary "They can just stop everything if they want to. If we are going to run a region the province should give us the strength to do it right."

Potticary wants to see more power concentrated at the regional level and says the failure to create a regional conservation authority weakens the ability of the regional council to operate effectively

We can do it

Councillors are just as responsive to the conservation and recreation needs as appointees to conservation authorities, he says

Bowmanville Mayor Ivan Hobbs says there must be a single conservation authority and also argues for endowing the regional council with the duties and responsibilities for conservation instead of establishing a separate authority

"When you form a region," he says, "it is extremely important for conservation to come under the regional council."

Hobbs expects problems to result as a consequence of maintaining the existing authorities

'There is a danger in having people from outside the region having jurisdiction over any part of the region," says Darlington Reeve Garnet Rickard

He foresees a problem in attempting to establish boundaries precisely coincident with those of the region since provincial legislation demands that conservation boundaries follow watersheds

However, Rickard agrees the principle of regional control over regional matters should be maintained

In fact, there could be two conservation authorities operating within the region as long as an outside-controlled authority is not allowed to intervene in regional matters, he says

Ajax Mayor Clarke Mason agrees theoretically with the principle of one region-one conservation authority, but feels the proposal is not practical for his municipality at this time

Ajax is a member oof the Metropolitan Toronto Conservation Authority which is presently just about ready to implement plans for the Ajax lakefront and the Duffin's Creek area

Ajax at last, he says, is on the point of receiving some direct benefit from MTRCA

I'd be loathe to have the MTRCA not involved because too much has already been committed, says Mason "It would be very much in our detriment to change at this point

And while Mason eventually would go for a single authority, he feels the metro conservation authority would not try to exert any undue influence on the region in the interim

'If all conservation authorities acted in a manner like the one I'm in," he says, "there would be no problem "

Pickering Reeve John Williams is at the opposite end of the pole to Des Newman

No way, says Williams

He is perfectly satisfied with the present conservation authorities and points out that the MTRCA has made a substantial investment in Pickering township in the way of the Greenwood and Claremount conservation areas and in acquisition of lakefront properties

"I don't think the people in the rest of the Durham Region realize the investment the Metro authority has made in this area says Williams

A Durham Regional conservation authority couldn't afford to do the kind of things MTRCA with its broad financial base can do says the reeve

Durham couldn't afford MTRCA style says CLOCA chairman

There is no need for a regional conservation authority says the chairman of the Central Lake Ontario Conservation Authority

John Goodwin, deputy reeve of Whitby and CLOCA chairman, challenges arguments of his mayor Des Newman, that the existence of two conservation authorities within the region one overlapping from Metro is a danger to the region

John Goodwin
CLOCA

Conservation authorities are created irrespective of municipal boundaries to do a specific job, says Goodwin

Watersheds are used as conservation authority boundaries, he notes, and the regional boundaries are not based on watersheds

In this aspect, says Goodwin, it would be difficult to implement the proposal of a single conservation authority for the region, based on regional boundaries

He sees no danger of conservation authorities stalling municipal or regional projects since the regional council will appoint the members to the authorities and has the right to appoint only regional council members

Mayor Newman wants to take Pickering and Ajax out of the Metropolitan Toronto Region Conservation Authority and put them into another regional authority, says Goodwin

There are two major problems involved in this suggestion, he says

First, both Ajax and Pickering are quite happy to continue their association with the MTRCA, he says

And secondly, a Durham regional authority would not likely command the financial resources to maintain the active program and investment of the Metreo Authority in the region

Besides, says Goodwin Metro people use the two conservation areas in Pickering and should have to pay for this use

"The province just didn't envision conservation authorities having coterminous boundaries with the region," says the CLOCA chairman

Survey to determine drug users

Just who in Oshawa uses drugs and why?

A survey is now being conducted in the city to establish the "social profile" of the average drug user

A subcommittee of the board of directors for 56 Colborne, headed by Lynda Sauriol, has embraked on a two-pronged investigation into who, generally, uses drugs, and what drugs are in common circulation

The situation in the city in late spring indicated that either drug use is down or that people are becoming more accustomed to it, says Sauriol

"We really didn't think it was down and we did want a true assessment of the picture," she says

This week the five-member subcommittee will meet to assess reports from the various community agencies that have some involvement with drug users

The next stage will be a series of interviews with young people.

The 56 Colborne staff and some of the young people who have been through the program there will be doing most of the interviewing by going to where the users are. Sources, of course, will be kept strictly confidential, says Sauriol

"We're not out to find who is involved in the sense of specific individuals," she says, "but what is happening generally."

The final picture may be somewhat different from what society generally expects, she says

Sauriol suspects that the study will find a large number of people in the late-20's age group, affluent, well-established and respected people in the community, are common drug users particularly of alcohol, marijuana and hashish.

Certainly drug users now are more sophisticated and discreet in their use than was the case two or three years ago, says the social worker with the Oshawa Social services Department

Most people associate frequent drug use with youngsters in their late teens, she says But she expects the incidence may not be as high in this age group as among young adults with jobs and money to spend

The outcome from investigations of younger kids may be frightening, says Sauriol, since this is the age when younsters are so curious

Alcohol no doubt will remain at the top of the list of drugs that are used and abused, she says

"As long as behavior is not anti-social," says Sauriol, "most people aren't worried about what others are doing. Like parents closing their eyes to a teenage daughter's promiscuity until she gets pregnant

A preliminary report is to be presented to the 56 Colborne board of directors in September

THE SHORELINE PROPERTY ASSISTANCE ACT, 1973

The City of Oshawa has agreed to participate in a municipal/provincial program to provide assistance to owners of shoreline properties adversely affected by high water levels.

The program, which will be carried out under legislation recently enacted by the Province of Ontario, provides a procedure by which owners of shoreline properties may obtain loans to assist in carrying out work to repair or protect these properties where such work is related to the high water level.

A brief description of the program is as follows:

1. Applications for loans should be made and approved before work is commenced.
2. Loans on approved projects will be available after the work has been completed and certified as satisfactory by a Municipal Inspector.
3. Interest on the loans will be at the rate of 8% per annum
4. Loans will be repaid to the City in twenty annual installments, collectible as taxes.
5. Loans will be limited to 90% of the total cost of the work in all cases, and to a maximum of $20,000.00 in the case of building repairs, and to a maximum of $150.00 per foot of shoreline in the case of construction of such works as retaining walls and dykes.

Owners of shoreline property in the City of Oshawa wishing to obtain more detailed information and application forms may do so at the Office of the City Clerk, City Hall, Oshawa.

Rural, city folks mingle at fair

A fair is a day off the farm for rural dwellers but it's like a day on the farm for city residents, says Ed Starr

Starr, secretary of the agricultural and horticultural society of the Ontario ministry of agriculture and food, spoke to an Oshawa Chamber of Commerce luncheon today about the problems facing county fairs in a largely urbanized environment

In a pre-luncheon interview, Starr says that unless people begin to support fairs and quit thinking "they are a thing of the past", then they may die out

He classes the Oshawa Fair, which begins Thursday, and continues through Sunday, as a medium-sized fair

"A fair is a show window for farmers and rural people to display their wares, but it is for the business community as well," he says. "It is a meeting place for all

There are 250 samll medium and large fairs operated annually in the province, he says, and some are beginning to die because of the attitude of some people

"People are now saying that fairs are a thing of the past," he says. "But they have been for 150 or 200 years. Fairs will only exist as long as people are interested in having them."

Farm people are being tagged as slow to change by city dwellers, he says, and that image might be one of the contributing factors affecting the success of some fairs

"But farm people are really perhaps quicker to accept changes than city people and one example would be how farmers adapted to such sophisticated farm machinery and how they have improved their livestock," he says

A successful fair will combine the agricultural and competitive livestock displays with a ladies' section as well as a midway which starr terms "the lighter side of a fair

Oshawa's fair could really "explode" if it had a better location, and if people in the area, and the city were prepared "to throw their weight behind it", he says

He maintains that the present site of the fair, Alexandra Park, isn't large enough for the fair to expand

"I was amazed at some of the buildings there that are being used for the fair," he says "They sould be condemned

If Oshawa had better facilities for the fair, Starr is convinced that it would attract a lot more people The city, he says, has the potential to stage a gala event, but again, that would depend on how enthusiastic the people were

I think the size of the crowd in attendance at last year's fair is an indication of how many people still want a fair in Oshawa," he says. "As long as people have a love for animals, you can operate a good fair But you can't throw the torch down and give up You have got to work at it."

Meanwhile, back at Alexandra Park, the 66th annual Oshawa Fair will open its gates Tursday at 10 a m The first day is billed as 'children's day' with 4-H Club activities beginning at 1 p.m. and eight heats of horse racing, with wagering privileges, beginning at 5 p m

An official opening of the fair will be held at 8 30 p.m. with the Miss Oshawa Fair Contest proceeding it at 9 p m

Livestock judging of Herfords, Shorthorns, Angus, light horses, ponies, Clydesdales and commercial horses will be featured Friday

On the same day at 6:30 p.m. the Ontario County Dairy Princess Contest will take place followed by a stage show at 8 p m featuring Vince Mumford

On Saturday there will be more livestock judging followed by nine heats of harness racing with betting privileges. At 4 p.m there will be a heavy horse drawing contest. During the evening there will be "an old tyme" fiddlers' contest and old time dancing

Sunday will start with a saddle horse competition at 9 a.m. followed by a log-sawing contest at 1:30 p m and a light horse drawing contest at 2 p m

All during Sunday afternoon there will be a family program The midway will be operated by the Toronto-based Conklin Shows During the fair there will also be a street parade featuring Formosa Spring Brewery's 10-horse hitch

Admission is $1 for adults and 25 cents for children Parking charges will be 50 cents per car

Shaw festival isn't quite up to par

By Herschel Rosen

The true star of this year's twelfth Shaw Festival at Niagara-on-the-Lake is a magnificent new theatre

Designed by architect Rou Thom, and built for the relatively small sum of $3 million, it replaces the Courthouse Theatre, which housed the Festival for its first eleven years

The new theatre has almost three times the seating capacity of the Court House but, with just over 800 seats, it still retains a high degree of intimacy. It far surpasses the older building in terms of audience comfort, and also in the technical facilities now available to the company

It is unfortunate that artistic director, Paxton Whitehead, chose plays for this inaugural season which are less than first-rate

Shaw's You Never Can Tell is diverting, but its pleasures wear thin after three hours

Among the pleasures on view, though, are the performances of Mary Savidge, as a Victorian Women's libber, Paxton Whitehead, playing a fortune-hunting dentist, and Stanley Holloway, Shaw's common-sense, working-class waiter, who addresses his own son, a successful lawyer, as "sir"

James Valentine provides an enjoyable combination of pomposity and superciliousness as the son

Director Edward Gilbert fails to maintain the buoyant tempo he establishes in the first act, but he must share the blame with Bernard Shaw

The production is handsomely mounted. Maurice Strike is particularly to be commended for the beautiful sitting room which he has provided for the third and fourth acts

There is scarcely enough in William Golding's The Brass Butterfly to provide material for a one-hour television program let alone a full evening in the theatre

Certain superficial resemblances to Shaw account for this play's inclusion in the Shaw Festival season. The dialogue is literate and occasionally witty, and one can detect similarities in theme and characterization between Butterfly and Shaw's Caesar and Cleopatra

Only August Schellenberg as the Emperor, in spite of frequent lapses with his lines, manages to rise above the general lassitude of the production

For the most part, the brass proves to be lead, and the butterfly never progresses beyond the caterpillar stage

The Shaw Festival continues until September 23; You Never Can Tell is virtually a sell-out; Brass Butterfly will play until the end of August, with tickets still available. Another Shaw play, Fanny's First Play, will join the repertoire in August

Old tyme fiddlers

An Old Tyme Fiddlers' Contest and Old Tyme Dancing will be two of the highlights featured at the Oshawa Fair next Saturday, July 21

With prizes offered of $100, $50 and $25, the fiddlers' contest will start at 7:15 p.m. and is open to any old-time fiddler

Following the contest, live music will be provided by Earl Brown's Country Echoes at 9 p.m. for the dancing which will include couple dances, schottische Rye Waltz and Gay Gordons as well as modern round dancing with some old square dancing and country music. This event is free to all paying admission to the fair

Oshawa and East Whitby discuss future

Oshawa and East Whitby unite...but talk about it first

A committee of municipal officials and elected representatives from Oshawa and East Whitby will meet to iron out the problems of amalgamation under regional government at the suggestion of the province

City council Monday confirmed the appointments of Mayor Jim Potticary and Con. Allan Pilkey along with all major city department heads to a special steering committee that will meet with East Whitby Township Reeve John Howden, his deputy reeeve and township department heads

The committee will consider and recommend to the 1974 Oshawa city council, which will then be composed of representatives from both areas, matters pertaining to area council policies and procedures following amalgamation

The committee can only make recommendations It will not have the authority to finalize future policies or negotiate on behalf of the new council

The committee will analyse bylaws from both municipalities and repeal those that are obsolete consolidate those that are uniform, standardize those that are alike in content; and, continue those that are and will be applicable throughout the new amalgamated area municipality

It will also take land, building, public works and machinery inventories and make note of long term commitments that have not been finalized by either municipality

It will consider assets and list capital commitments and grants as well as recommend the use of reserve funds

It will consider just about every aspect of the two communities and how it would be best to amalgamate resources and liabilities. A committee report is not expected until after the Oct. 1 regional government election

David Chan, 7, of Pickering won two firsts and one second in the Canadian Music Festival held at the General Vanier Secondary School in Oshawa July 14 and 15. Categories of competition included accordian, Spanish guitar, steel guitar, organ, percussion and piano.

Canadian electoral boundaries are frozen by bill

Oshawa-Whitby federal riding boundaries will not change for at least 18 months

A bill which freezes all Canadian electoral boundaries was given second reading and passed in principle Friday in the House of Commons.

Oshawa-Whitby MP Ed Broadbent says the second reading was basically given all-party consent.

"The unfortunate part of the bill is that it preserves the already-disproportionate share of seats that rural Canada has in the House," he says

If a bill was introduced to redistribute seats according to representation by population, Broadbent says the prairie provinces, and specifically Saskatchewan and Manitoba, would lose seats

Broadbent says all parties want a chance to develop some sort of scheme where they would not lose seats but more seats could be added to heavily-populated urban areas, and now they have a chance to work on such a plan for the 18 months this bill gives them

Last December it was expected that the Oshawa-Whitby riding would be split in two

"To give effective representation, the riding does need to be split," Broadbent says. "The riding is one of the largest in Canada. I personally enjoy representing Whitby and I think I would miss all the contacts I have, but a split will certainly come."

Broadbent expects third and final reading of the bill after the summer recess, and during the following 18 months, new legislation may be introduced that will distribute coundaries

Another bill which he considers important and says his party has been calling for a long time is the one dealing with election expenses.

Under the new bill, a national party can spend only 30 cents per voter. At the riding level, the local candidate can spend $1 for each of the first 15,000 voters, 50 cents for the next 10,000 and 25 cents for the remainder

Broadbent says the bill provides that full disclosure of all campaign fund donations of more than $100 be made to the public.

"This means that the influence on the party will be known," he says. "A small contribution, although greatly appreciated by any candidate, doesn't have any real influence on party policy. I think it is important to know who is supporting which party."

The third part of the bill provides financial assistance for parties at the constituency level if the candidate gets a minimum of 20 per cent of the vote cast

If a candidate gets that 20 per cent or more, he will receive for his party from the public treasury the cost of one mailing to the complete electorate, eight cents for each of the first 25,000 voters on the official voting list and six cents for each of the remaining voters. He will also receive an outright cash subsidy of $250, and if he is in a rural riding, up to $3,000 travelling expenses

Estimating that there are 55,000 eligible voters in Oshawa-Whitby, that means the NDP could spend only $16,500 and Broadbent could spend only $25,000 to win an election

"What the subsidy part of the bill does is that it makes parties with no access to funds less dependent on private sources of revenue," he says. "But I think it is better for parties and individuals to raise their own money."

He says he doesn't like the subsidy stipulation that a candidate must receive 20 per cent of the vote Broadbent claims it should be only 10 per cent

"The percentage is too high," he says. "It will weigh heavily on a new party emerging anywhere and established parties may come close to not being eligible at all."

Picked in its Prime

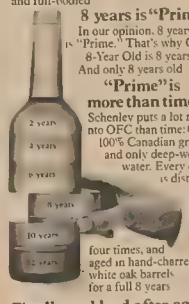
The more you know about whisky, the better for OFC 8-Year Old. The Prime Canadian.

For starters: New OFC 8-Year Old is aged a full 2 years longer than either of the two largest selling premium brands.

Thus, age alone, should make us better. But any good distiller will tell you, it takes more than time to make a whisky prime.

The truth about age

2-year Old Canadian rye is pale, harsh and unmatured Around 12, it's darker and has begun to take on a heavy 'woody' taste. In between 2 and 12, at one point in time, Canadian whisky is in "The Prime of Life": golden, mellow, smooth and full-bodied



8 years is "Prime"

In our opinion, 8 years old is "Prime." That's why OFC 8-Year Old is 8 years old. And only 8 years old

"Prime" is more than time

Schenley puts a lot more into OFC than time: Only 100% Canadian grains and only deep-welled water. Every drop is distilled four times, and aged in hand-charred, white oak barrels for a full 8 years

Finally we blend after aging

Why after? So that, despite differences from barrel to barrel, OFC never differs from bottle to bottle. Or glass to glass. 120 separate taste tests ensure it and each bottle carries this numbered back label. This is Schenley's Guarantee of "Prime" 8-Year Old Quality. "Prime Quality."

Thousands are switching to OFC and taste is the reason.

Try OFC 8-Year Old. We think you'll find it a very rewarding experience

Cups and cards tell of luck - or death

By Jane Milne
Staff Writer

The skepticism many people have for her profession is a good thing, says Madge Scattergood, tea cup and card reader.

"A great deal of people are skeptical about fortune telling but I think that is a very good thing because unfortunately there have been people in the business looking for an easy way of making money and fakers who have given it a bad name."

Taught by her grandmother when she was a child, Mrs. Scattergood read only for friends up until a few years ago when she moved to Ajax and received permission from the police department to tell people what the future may hold for them.

"The police gave their permission as long as I only charged a nominal fee ($3) and as long as I just read tea cups and cards," she says.

With the belief that everyone has some ESP (extrasensory perception), she says it is the way in which it is used by individuals that makes the difference.

"I just read the cards and may at that time pick up vibrations," she says. "It comes to you or it doesn't. I may read five or six people and not get any ESP, it depends."

She says that while everyone has five senses she believes that because we do not use our full potential of brain power, senses beyond the five exist.

"My grandmother and parents thought I was a little more sensitive as a child when taught how to read but everybody has these abilities," she says.

The actual way in which Mrs. Scattergood says she arrives at the information she tells her customers, is through symbols which her grandmother taught her.

Different symbols

First of all, she says, tea cup and card reading are both different. You can get books on the symbols and interpretations of them but different books give different interpretations. The symbols I use are my own.

She says when reading tea leaves for example she can see scenes, different architecture, peoples' names and initials and numbers.

"I can't always be sure though if it is a street number or a lucky number for instance so the interpretation is important," she says. "Also I might see someone climbing a mountain which could be symbolic for the climb of success or it could really be someone literally climbing a mountain.

Most of the people she reads for come back regularly to see her and so far she says she has received only two complaints.

These peoples' cycles of time were longer than I thought but what I told them did eventually work out," she says. "I misjudged on the time.

She has found that the frequency by which people request her to read for them fluctuates but that it always seems to work out so that her family routine is not disrupted.

"It's a funny thing when I'm busy with my family there aren't so many calls.

Mrs. Scattergood says people come to her for readings from Oshawa, Ajax, Pickering and that one couple drove all the way from Montreal just to have her read for them and returned the same day.

Some people come to her for personal reasons and some for business reasons but she says most just need a bit more self-confidence and cheering-up.

Ups and downs

"Most people want hope for the future," she says. "They tend to be mature people who've had a few ups and downs in their life so they can take the bad with the good. If I see a personal tragedy though - if someone was to die, I would not tell them."

"I'm not a doctor nor do I know the strength of an individual's nerves and mind," she says. "If I was to tell them they were going to die, they might go out and do something foolish and I don't want that on my conscience."

If she sees a death in a person's family she says she just tells them that they will hear of a death but doesn't specify who or when.

"I don't guarantee anything I say but if a death was to happen for example, at least the person I told would be expecting it and it might be less of a shock."

Mrs. Scattergood recalls one young girl who came to her for a reading and was surprised when Mrs. Scattergood asked her when she had last had a medical checkup. The girl did go to a doctor and found she had a brain tumor, returning after the operation to tell Mrs. Scattergood of what had happened.

"I felt good that I might have had something to do with getting her to a doctor but such things don't happen too often."

Another young person came to see her and asked if she could advise him on whether or not to have a serious operation which may or may not save his life.

"Only he could make that decision," she says. "I have no right to interfere. When people come to me for advice I would rather they go to their doctor, psychologist or marriage counsellor - to someone who is qualified.

As far as being able to tell events in her own life Mrs. Scattergood says she sees the main events but is still surprised from time to time.

Interest in the occult has taken an upturn in North America recently and the Durham Region has its own soothsayer. The Ajax fortuneteller interviewed by This Week says people from as far away as Montreal come to her in hopes of learning what is in store for them in the future. She will make predictions based on the reading of cards or teacups, unless what she sees is the person's impending death.

YES a positive answer to student unemployment

EDITOR'S NOTE: This Week, in an effort to assist in providing summer jobs for students, has agreed to a proposal by the Ontario government and Junior Achievement of Oshawa to turn over one page of our newspaper each week beginning July 25 to a group of youngsters who wish to turn out a mini-paper on their own. The following articles, written by them, explains what their organization is attempting to do.

O Y S E (Ontario Youth Summer Enterprises) initially began in the summer of 71 in Windsor propagated by the Ontario ministry of labor

The project was co-sponsored by the Ontario government and Junior Achievement of Windsor The purpose of the program was to provide a worth while experience for young people in search of a summer job

Miniature companies with memberships of 20 to 25 students were divided into two groups under the guidance of Junior Achievement of Windsor

The complete organization involved 178 miniature enterprises Supervising the program was a Windsor graduate Achiever acting as program manager

The summer undertaking operated on a schedule of five days per week and three hours per day during the month of July and August

Fifty-two Windsor students participated in the project gaining valuable experience in the methods of the business world The students were given the responsibility of choosing their own officers, selling their wares and paying the expense from the profits gained

Participation was avid with the program having an attendance record of 80 per cent with the average employment of each individual being 20 hours weekly

Remuneration was based on the success of the company and the only guaranteed income was sales commission at approximately 10 per cent of the selling price

The Ontario government and Junior Achievement were pleased with the results hence the expansion of the program to the present program of Ontario Youth Summer Enterprises which began in 1972

The following communities fostered O Y S E projects Brantford St Mary's Chatham Sarnia Hamilton Thunder Bay Kitchener Waterloo London Oshawa Windsor Peterborough, Woodstock Etobicoke and Scarborough

The expansion of the program provided employment for 863 high school students In eight weeks the project yielded $44,976 in sales leaving $22 900 for themselves for their efforts Again the attendance level was high

Currently in Oshawa under O Y S E there are three companies operating The total enrolment for each program is slightly below the minimum level at the present time Each company is under the supervision of one or two program managers

The three enterprises provide the following services silk screening t-shirts, painting houses and general repairs and production of one page in "This Week"

Our company Y E S (Youth's Enterprising Summer) is concerened with the production of one page in this newspaper Thirteen energetic students comprise the editorial and sales staff of our company

The program began July 3 1973 and terminates August 24 1973 with the publication beginning July 25 1973 and running for five consecutive weeks

The enrollment is slightly lower than the prescribed quota therefore we encourage those high school students interested to contact us on the second floor of the Youth Centre on Centre Street in Oshawa

Each member of the company must be a shareholder and therefore is entitled to a position and vote on the board of directors

The members have elected five executives to form the management team, the positions being publisher, editorial manager, advertising manager corporate secretary and treasurer

The organization is scheduled to operate on a four day-per-week structure having a total of four hours work per day

Special meetings are held on Fridays to educate the participants in business practices The salary of the participants is again dependent on the financial success of the enterprise except for sales commissions

We, the organizational body are striving to supply a valuable service to the community and promise the deserving public reading material bursting with zeal vigor social conscience and journalistic integrity

Youth's Enterprising Summer is the name of a group of Oshawa and area young people who have been given jobs thanks to Junior Achievement and a provincial grant. Members of the group (left to right) are Valerie Bothwell, Lucy Glassford, Judy Landry (program manager), Lucy Brown, Celine Chamberland and Kathy Derhak.

Films, plays, games -- oh, yes -- and books are offered to children this summer at the library

Snow White, Peter Pan and Winnie the Pooh may show up in Oshawa, this summer

The possibility of having such notables grace our fair city stems from one of the summer programs featured at the Boys and Girls Public Library which has asked the children to dress up as their favorite book characters

"Many children just come down here during the summer to browse and read" says Joan Cranfield head of Boys and Girls Services of the Oshawa Public Library "The library is a very relaxed and happy place"

With the prime purpose of the library being to introduce children to books, Mrs. Cranfield says the many summer programs such as the costume one are offered along with extras like lemonade

The ages of the children range from three to 12 with Tuesday morning at 10:30 a.m. featuring "story time" for preschool, kindergarten and Grades 1 and 2 children

"We tell them stories teach them games finger-plays and chance (a word game where the children respond to a word with another)," she says "We also take a story which the children act out by taking parts and singing

Each Tuesday a different theme is chose which may be on the subject of farm animals, people, camping, or seasons with poetry and stories to illustrate the subject and teach the children about it

Films are shown every day Monday through Friday at 2:30 p.m. with a variety of three or four keyed to all of the ages

"On Wednesday at 10:30 a.m. we have our Goodtime program," says Mrs. Cranfield An upcoming program will feature a well-known hockey player, a horsewoman and tennis player who will come to the library to talk about their sports to the children who are ages eight, nine or up

The Thursday morning program is called "Children Around the World" which is hoped to interest the young library members in reading about children from other lands

"This program is for any child who can read," she says. "They are taught a game to do with the country, we play the country's music, show pamphlets and pictures, and also a film on the country."

Mrs Cranfield has found over the years that children tent to read more non-fiction during the summer and that circulation keeps up

"The members of the library number just alittle less than one-quarter of the population of Oshawa and the average number of books read by the children is 10 per year," she says

There are seven assistants, students who staff the boys' and girls' library during the summer, while the regular staff is on holidays

"These students have all been pages at the library before going to university and are familiar with the work here and enjoy it," she says

Mrs. Cranfield says she also enjoys working with children very much

"I find the children very honest and respectful," she says. "The only damage done to books is accidental and during the winter school groups come in and are taught good care of books."

The membership for any child living in Oshawa is free. Children are encouraged to join any of the summer programs offered by the library which are also free of any charge

The boys' and girls' library is open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. on Monday Tuesday and Thursday and from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Wednesday and Friday During the months of July and August, it is closed on Saturdays

Autofest roars into Oshawa again

Oshawa Autofest is back this year and the organizers hope that it will be bigger and better than the first successful effort in September 1972

Autofest '73 will start Sept 15 and culminate in the annual Grand Prix race at Mosport, Sept 23

A parade through the streets of Oshawa will kick off festivities

An Autofest queen will be crowned the first evening of Autofest '73 to preside over events for the remainder of the week. Twenty-eight contestants are already registered for the beauty pageant

The week will be filled with soap box derbies, special service club meeting concerts and an Autofest Ball, sponsored by the Oshawa Chamber of Commerce

One of the most popular events of the festival is sure to be a two-day Autofest Car Show. Last year the event drew thousands of auto buffs to view racing cars, antique cars and the largest collection of Corvettes ever assembled in Ontario

That show was highlighted by the display of General Motor's Manta Ray and GM has promised an equally spectacular special display for the 1973 Autofest

Cars from the Craven Foundation and local car clubs will also be featured in this year's show

Throughout the car show, movies of previous Grand Prix races will be shown continuously

Helicopter visit

Modern technology has come to the aid of the real estate broker

Tuesday, Bob and Tom Shea of Shea Real Estate used a helicopter to visit all 20 of their offices in Southern Ontario on the same day

They say however, that there is no truth to the rumor they plan to open an office on the moon if they canget a good deal on a rocket

Oshawa foster parents send Yoon Jae to school

Thousands of miles away in the Republic of Korea, lives a little boy whose future looks brighter thanks to an Oshawa family

Yoon Jae Ku is the youngest of three children of a disenfranchised Sung-nam family who now receives vitamins, blankets, towels, soap and medical and dental care through the Foster Parents Plan of Canada which includes as one of it "parents" James Arnold of Oshawa

"We have so much and they so little that we decided to share with them a little of what we have here in Canada," says Arnold, an employee of General Motors

A contribution of $17 a month is sent by Arnold to assist both Jae Ku and his family along with monthly letters to him describing life in Canada and encouraging him in his school work

The eight-year-old now attends primary school and studies Korean, arithmetic, social studies, natural science singing, drawing morals and physical education

Arnold says the "adoption" is a family project with his wife and daughter taking part in the letter-writing as well as looking forward to the monthly letters they receive from Korea

"We first joined the plan in 1970 when we were assigned a little girl named Lee Jae Duk, also from Korea," he says "Her financial situation bettered so that she and her family no longer needed assistance and we were assigned the little boy."

Every year they receive a progress report on how their foster child is doing at school At Christmas and on the child's birthday, the

Ana Cristina Carmo

Yoon Jae Ku

Arnold family send gifts of money

They are so appreciative, says Mrs Arnold "They never miss writing It is a real joy and a pleasure to be part of the plan and we think it is good for our own daughter, Jane, to see that there are needs in the world

Foster Parents Plan has been inexistance for 12 years and operates in Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Indonesia, the Republic of Korea, the Philippines, Viet Nam and Brazil the country of another child "adopted" by former Oshawa resident Judith Britton

Now living in Toronto, Miss Britton recently became the foster parent of Ana Cristina Carmo, ago two and a half years, youngest of five children

Ana Cristina's father earns about $42 a month as a shoemaker to support the family of seven so the assistance received from the plan is very much needed

All foster parents receive a history on the child assigned to them which describes the family, living conditions and the child

The information received by Miss Britton says "Ana Cristina is light-complected. She has brown hair and eyes She is shy. With family, she is obedient. She likes to play with dolls She would like to have a doll. She does not know what she might like to be She is too small to go to school"

Foster Parents Plan of Canada is located in Toronto on St Clair Avenue West and is officially registered as a Canadian charitable organization by the federal government

Da Vinci models on display

An exhibition of 25 models built from Leonardo da Vinci's scientific and technical drawings will be on display at the Robert McLaughlin Art Gallery until Aug 12

On loan from IBM Canada Ltd, the models include a triple-tiered machine gun designs of two-level highways for pedestrians and vehicular traffic a device for determining tensile strength of wire as well as that of the indispensable and perhaps too—familiar roadside instrument, the jack

Da Vinci, who conceived the 'flying machine' and parachute among other things lived and worked as a genius in art, science, mechanics and military design between 1452 and 1519

Oshawa firm builds 200

It takes five days to build a fiberglass sailboat which you can enjoy every summer, all season long, says Art Lintjens.

And Lintjens should know. He's owner-manager of Sirocco Boatworks and Fiberglass Ltd. on Taunton Road in Oshawa, where each year about 200 13- and 15-foot sailboats are made.

Lintjens, who terms himself "an accountant who has always been keen on sailing," got into the boat building business about five years ago and says making a fiberglass boat is a relatively easy process.

Local boatbuilder

Sirocco Boatworks and Fiberglass Ltd. of Oshawa produces about 200 13- and 15-foot sailboats each year for sailing enthusiasts in Canada and the United States. Art Lintjens, owner-manager of the firm who describes himself as an accountant who has always been keen on sailing, began building the fiberglass craft about five years ago.

sailboats a year for U.S. and Canadians

All it takes is a couple of moulds, lots of fiberglass, glue and rivets

The process begins with the application of a special resin and fiberglass to a hull mould, which, of course, is shaped exactly like the sailboat.

After it dries, you take the thin, boat-like frame from the mould—gently. If it breaks or sticks to the mould, forget it, says Lintjens you have to start all over again

Then you put the frame in a second frame and insert the centre board and the plywood that will give it strength and messily apply gobs of resin to act as glue for various grades of fiberglass, from thin 1½-ounce fiberglass sheets to thick, woven sheets of the fabric

Instead of using sheets of fiberglass, Lintjens says some manufacturers use a spray gun which shoots threads of fiberglass and resin combined He says that method gives 50 per cent less strength to the finished product and the workman can t control the weight of the craft if he applies too much spray fiberglass to one area of the boat.

"A uniform weight is always important to a sailboat," he says. "It wouldn't matter so much if you were building boats to carry a motor

While the hull frame is beginning to take shape in another part of the shop, the same process is underway building the deck portion of the boat. When both are completed, they are glued and fitted together, sanded to get rid of the rough spots, riveted and finished

The glue that is used to fit the two pieces together is a resin-phenolic mixture, which Lintjens says turns out much the same as body fill that is used on cars.

The paint that is used to add finishing touches is a colored resin that is sprayed on and actually bonds itself into the fiberglass.

In the summer it may take less time to build a boat because the heat makes the resin dry quicker, whereas in the winter, it may take three times longer

Lintjens says his peak season begins in March, and by June he can't make enough boats to supply dealers The main reason, he says, is because people want boats in the summer But even though there is a peak period the plant operates steadily all year

About 85 percent of his output goes to a U S market while the rest goes to Montreal and Toronto

"We got a whole shipment of seven boats going to Halifax this week," says Lintjens sarcastically. "That's quite an accomplishment because they think they're the only ones who can make boats. They don't go in too much for the newer-style boats either '

He says his biggest problem is transporting the sail boats, which weigh about 470 pounds each, to the dealers. He can't ship them by train because that would be too costly, not only for shipping charges, but also for packaging So he sends them by tractor-trailer

He says the 13-footer sells for about $895. He has built "Sirocco overnighters," however, that retail for $1,745.

In the years that he has been in the business, Lintjens says he has found it competative

"It's a hard grind for the first couple of years to get your name around," he says. "You have to convince everyone that you're making good quality boats and that's why ours are selling so well now "

Chess awards

Championship trophies were awarded Sunday at the Oshawa Area Chess Club.

Russell Crook, 18, of Oshawa received the Clarence Hopps Memorial Trophy and $25 for winning the club championship

Reinhard Gross of Whitby received a trophy and $15 for winning the "B" championship

By winning the club championship, Crook became the youngest champion since the club was revived in 1947 He won with a score of 3 to 0 against Larry Roberts of Oshawa, who received $15 for second place

Second place in the "B championship went to Peter White of Oshawa who received $10

Bob Moon, former city alderman and unsuccessful mayoralty candidate in the last civic election, has resigned as co-ordinator of the South Oshawa Community Involvement Program. He is seen above with some of the youngsters he dealt with before his resignation caused by a disagreement over a housing ombudsman for Oshawa.

Moon is down on ombudsman issue

Bob Moon may be out as coordinator of the South Oshawa Community Involvement Program, but he still believes in the need for a housing ombudsman for Oshawa

Moon a former city alderman resigned his position as coordinator of the group on Sunday night after his board of directors challenged his announcement last week that the group would appoint a liaison person as go-between for SOCIP and many other individuals and groups with regards to housing

Mrs. Jean Hunsdale, a South Oshawa Community Association director, said that Moon had made the announcement on his own initiative and that any such announcement should come from Ottawa

Moon maintains the appointment of an ombudsman is well within the powers of SOCIP under the terms of the federal local initiatives program structure, and that the need for such a position still exists

Such a position, he says, could mean that person spending a few hours or even five days a week handling the problems and or complaints of persons on housing matters

With Armstrong Homes It's a family affair

Dr. Al Jones won the Ideal Dairy Trophy for low gross in the Oshawa Chamber of Commerce golf tournament July 12. City controller John McLaughlin won the Rossland Park trophy for low net.

Biculturalism is underwritten by General Motors

Fifteen Oshawa and district teenage sons and daughters of General Motors employees are participating this year in the exchange of English and French-speaking students of the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews

The Oshawa students visited homes of students in Quebec until July 12, then returned home with their French-speaking hosts from Quebec who will stay in Oshawa until July 26.

Designed to promote a better understanding and appreciation of Canada's major culture groups as well as to encourage bilingualism, the student exchange program has been in operation for 18 years

GM is a contributor to the council, and John D Baker, president of GM of Canada is a leading member of its financial campaign committee

Oshawa students and their hosts in Quebec who are returning their visit are Paulina Alexandre 192 Westmount and Marie Claude Tremblay of Alma; Evelyn Anita Campbell Prestonvale Road South and Madeleine Guy of St Felicien Maureen Drumm 110 Mary Street and Claire Vachon Thetford Mines; Sharon Imeson, 173 Glencairn Street and Diane Poirier Montreal

District teenagers from GM families include Luanne Catton, Blackstock, who visited Lorraine Cloutier, Joliette, and Roxanne Rutkay, Bowmanville, who visited Allaire Dominique, Coleraine, Que.

Pioneer Cemetery may be Lakeview Park's neighbour

Oshawa's Pioneer Cemetery on the hill by the harbor may become a Pioneer Cemetery adjacent to Lakeview Park if all goes well.

Soil tests at a site immediately east of Lakeview Park, now a residential area, done co-operatively by the harbor commission, the city and the local health unit indicate the site may be ideal for the relocation of the more than 150-year old cemetery

The planned relocation of the cemetery now located on a hilltop on the east side of the harbor has resulted in several sites being proposed over the past few months the last site being at Bonnie Brae Point

The feasibility of the new site has still to be considered by the harbor commission in terms of availability and cost

Although initial soil tests indicated the ground too wet for use as a cemetery, further drillings on an approximately one-half acre site showed dry samples

No further information is available on whether the commission will recommend entering into negotiations with the owner of the land

The acquisition of the land would mean two homes being demolished and the residents being forced to relocate

Car insurance rate increase imminent for Durham

Like just about every other commodity or service, car insurance rates will be increasing in the Durham region

Motorists in both Ontario and Quebec living in urbanized areas will face insurance premium increases of between five and 14 per cent when the new rating programs go into effect Aug. 1.

Area insurance men although expecting the increases, are unable to say what they will be for motorists in Durham until they are handed down

Spokesmen for the Canadian Underwriters Association expect the average provincial increase to be around nine per cent.

That means that in Metro an annual premium may be up to $212 from $194 for the average motorist with standard coverage.

Insurance agents speculate that the increase is due partly to the higher claims insurance companies have been honoring. One area insurance agent says the higher claims could be due to higher-priced auto parts

No clear-cut answer

Even council is divided on housing

Fourth of a series

Housing experts seem to be avoiding the issues when it comes to defining why house prices are inflating so rapidly.

Instead of trying to find the root cause of the problem experts appear to be saying Canadians have it good—compared with Italy, or France or Germany

In a recent Canadian Magazine article housing expert Martin terWoort says

As with food prices, Canadians are probably better off in terms of choice quality and in ability to buy than people in most countries

It seems to be the same old story food prices are great in Canada compared with those in other countries the unemployment figure is great compared with other countries and now housing

It's beginning to sound like an election campaign No one has the answers so statistics are used to confuse the issue making the Canadian housing situation appear better than it is

So now we know that we're better off than Germany So who cares Does that help the young father earning something less than $14 500 a year buy his family a home

It's about time experts and politicians began looking in their own back yards Canadians don't live in Italy They live in Canada in Toronto Vancouver and Oshawa

And compared with Vancouver where the average home is now selling for about $30 000 the housing situation in Oshawa is pretty lousy

So far we have examined a few of the possible causes of rising home costs such as speculation unsalabilities of serviced land high mortgage interest rates and how they might be offset by land banking

Now it's time we looked in our own back yard and at the federal government or some Toronto-based developer or even the provincial government but at our own city council

Slow housing

One of the new policies of city council is to slow down housing in Oshawa in order to increase the non-residential tax base which gets more money into city coffers and lessens the tax burden on the established homeowner

The city wants to slow down residential development and encourage commercial and industrial development says planning board chairman Ald Bruce McArthur "Right now there's a great (tax base) imbalance which only means higher residential taxes As far as tax revenues are concerned residential development is a dead loss."

In the city's 1973 current budget, only $97,000 was alloted to help subsidize the servicing of housing developments

I think we are establishing a precedent, says Con Allan Pilkey It has never been done before in fact, it's gone unchecked Now is the time to take a look at it The tax ratio is going the wrong way and that means a burden to the residential taxpayer

Admittedly the new policy may decrease the tax bill for homeowners But what will it do for people who want to buy homes?

As any developer or economist will tell you the supply of houses will lessen and yet the demand for homes has increased Applying the law of supply and demand then the policy has increased the cost

City council is also proposing that developers pay lot levies on each unit they build The money is to go to help finance arterial roads in the city

This policy would raise a levy of $1 700 for building a single family dwelling $1 900 per dwelling unit for building a semi detached home and $950 per dwelling unit for building an apartment

The theory behind this, says Ald Alan Dewar, is that the people who cause arterial road construction the people who move into the city and buy new homes should pay for the cost of that road construction

I don't see this as an effort by the city to retard development and establish a better tax base he says If it means an increase in the cost of housing then that's a price we'll have to pay but it should be decided on that question

He has also said To the developer these charges appear to be designed to hinder the development process and artificially inflate the price of the product developers are seeking to market It appears as an artificial and discriminatory tax on one segment of the population those least able to pay the young family seeking its first home"

City Planning Director Peter Hammer sees the levy as "the only action the municipality can take to raise capital because it's the only revenue we have control over. Council has no other choice than to impose inequitable levies under the system".

by garnet cowsill

Mayor Jim Potticary says the city is asking the developers to pay lot levies to "ease established residents from paying for services"

He says he is convinced the levy will not raise home costs because developers will not be able to pass the cost of the levy onto the home buyer

"If they continue to think homeowners will continue to absorb these costs, they won't sell any houses because the homeowners will not buy them," he says. "We won't put the burden on the new homeowner"

Upward pressure

Ald. John Aker, on the other hand, sees the levy as just "another upward pressure on the already high costs of housing

It's just another unfair tax on a certain segment of the population" he says "If I have lived in an apartment for 20 years and then decide to buy a home, he won't I used the roads before"

He says the money for roads should come out of general tax revenues and not from the new home buyer's pocket

And how much will this raise the price of new homes in Oshawa if it gets through council?

Mike Kassinger, president of the Oshawa and District Builders' Association, says the levies will raise the costs of a new home by whatever the builder is charged according to the levy plus whatever interest he has to pay to get that money in the first place

In other words, the levy could raise the cost of a single family dwelling by $2 000, from current home prices of $42,000 to $44,000 Added to that is the mortgage interest that the average homebuyer will pay on the extra $2,000

"Sure the new homeowner is using those roads, but so is everyone else says Kassinger

Mixed with these two policies that will increase home costs, even though some dispute that fact, there is also a council policy completely contrary to retarding development land banking.

The issue of land banking has not really come before council yet, but Mayor Potticary says if the Oshawa airport is relocated, he would like to see the city buy the land and use it for a residential land bank.

On one hand council says retard home building and increase non-residential taxes, and then it turns around and implies that it would like to build new homes on the abandoned airport site

It's confusing, and perhaps it would be wise if council re-examined its priorities and accepted some of the responsibility of trying to either level home prices off or lower them

It would seem much easier for council to double its activities in trying to attract new industry and commence to the city in order to balance the tax base, than to retard development and increase housing costs

Hawkeyes' prospects are good for season says McTeer

By Scott Mercer
Sports Writer

The Oshawa Hawkeyes Junior football team, after completing last year with a highly-successful record, have a new coach and a new look

Bill McTeer, a former coach at an American university, has taken over the role as head coach. With him, he brought several different theories that will give the Hawkeyes a new look–and, he hopes, a winning strategy

After an outstanding rookie season, the Hawkeyes boast many veterans of last year's club who will help keep them a contender. They will compete in the same league as they did last year, against such teams as Lakeshore, Hamilton and Oakville

The season for the Oshawa club will begin on July 27 when they entertain Oakville

Although it is still too early in the season to fully evaluate his team, coach McTeer says he can see the basics of a good club He hopes for steady improvement throughout the season which will last into September

One problem the team must cope with is the departure of players for college at the beginning of September Key players such as Paul Nelson, Bill Cortis and Doug Lawrey will leave gaps in the team

Fortunately, the list of players who will leave may be confined to these three

With the certain loss of Nelson, considered the best quarterback to come into camp there has been keen competition for the position

Currently Steve Huhn Tom Buchanan, and Jim McHugh are battling for the spot Nelson will vacate in August The latter two hopefuls have also been alternating at split end as part of the new look of McTeer's ball club

He hopes to have each player learn at least two position in case of injury

Due to a low turnout, he has also been forced to consider having some players take a double shift, playing bother offence and defence.

Probably the biggest change instituted by the new coach, however, is the "wishbone" style offence Common to many collegiate teams in the States, McTeer hopes this versatile formation will win many games

It is designed primarily as a running offence, giving the quarterback several options on every play

After seeing his team in competition for the first time, in an intersquad game, McTeer sees a sound club but with room for improvement

"We'll have to stop the pass and cure our problem with fumbles," he said after viewing video tapes of the session, "but we are looking good for this early in the season"

With all of his basic strategies finalized, the only decision left for the coach is which player will take which job. Most positions are as yet undecided, and won't be until the last possible moment

McTeer will have his first chance to see his players in an actual game situation on Friday night. The Hawkeyes have scheduled their first exhibition game then, against Lakeshore

This, too, will give Oshawa football fans a preview of the team The game which will be held at the Civic Fields, should be an interesting one to see

Coach McTeer will undoubtedly spot all of his prospects in playing them at a variety of positions

Rough sport

A roller derby is no place for sissies as was graphically pointed out Sunday at the Oshawa Civic Auditorium when fists, elbows, knees and heads were used by competitors to cripple their opponents.

Cobourg wins junior fastball tournament

Although the Cobourg Juniors captured the overall team championship in tournament play on the weekend, they certainly did not attract all of the spectators interest

Galt's pitcher Don Scott, won the most valuable player award at the Oshawa City & District Junior Fastball Tournament, held at Alexandra Park. He pitched against the Cobourg squad but saw his team defeated by a score of 3-1 in the final game

Cobourg reached the final by virtue of wins over Toronto, Binbrook, and Smithville Meanwhile, Galt eliminated Grimsby Beamsville and Oshawa setting the stage for their final clash

Much of the success of the Galt team was attributable to Scott. He pitched all four of Galt's games, a total of 31 innings

He was, according to reports, the dominating individual in the games he played. When he was not pitching Scott contributed in the hitting department It is unfortunate for him and his team that he did not have quite enough to give the win in the final game

While they did not reach the finals, Oshawa's CKLB Juvenile Club does deserve some recognition Entering the tournament with little hope of winning (according to predictions), they battled gamely to the semi-final round ousting Woodstock and Willowdale

It was the strong Galt squad who edged Oshawa out of competition, beating them by a 2-1 count

Top juniors will play in O'Keefe tourney this Saturday

The oldest softball tournament in Canada the O'Keefe Oshawa City & District Softball Championship is scheduled for this Saturday at Alexandra Park featuring the top junior player in Canada

The make-up the 16th consecutive season for the tournament

Sponsored by O'Keefe Breweries it brings together the best clubs A total of 16 will play but five teams were turned down including Ottawa Sarnia Newmarket Niagara Falls and Toronto.

Among the teams entered are the Ingersoll MacLart Thorndale Lett Cedar Homes of Toronto, Strabane Woodstock Navy Vets Grimsby Peach Kings Cambridge Chargers formerly Galt

Willowdale Sports Hamilton Beamsville Sports Bimbrook Belleville Flames Smithfield Sealtest Cobourg Port Perry and the host team Oshawa CKLB Juveniles

This marks the first season that Oshawa has operated a Junior club under the sponsorship of Scugog Cleaners

Last year's champs are Niagara Falls

Annual Gold Cup event will feature top bowlers

Lawn bowling is a sport that is virtually ignored by the sports media. It is often an unknown game in circles outside the club itself.

One trip down to the Oshawa Lawn Bowling Club however, is enough to convince anyone of the popularity of the game.

Located on the corner of Colbourne and Kaiser streets, the club is an active spot on most nights. Soon it will assume new importance for the lawn bowling fan with the coming of the Gold Cup competition.

The Gold Cup is an annual event in Oshawa, and attracts the best bowlers from across the province. Sponsored by General Motors, the tournament has been a tradition in the city for almost fifty years.

Yet it is unlikely to draw crowds of spectators. Many people may not even realize it is happening.

For those who have never seen it played lawn bowling is an interesting, easy to follow sport that can be played by all ages and both sexes.

Players number from a single to four on a team. They roll their ball down the green (much like the putting surface in golf) and aim for a small, white ball called a "jack".

The bowling balls will curl with a twist of the thrower's hand, giving the shot a looping trajectory. The game is in many respects much like curling, except that the target is moveable rather than stationary.

One point is scored for each ball closer to the jack than the other team's closest.

The Gold Cup will draw 64 "rinks" each consisting of four players. Competition continues throughout an entire day, and is limited to men.

Since the club has only enough accommodation for 32 rinks at one time, two draws had to be scheduled. Each rink will play a total of three games, and at the end of the day a winner is decided.

The winning team is found by calculating a "plus-minus" figure (number of points scored as opposed to those given up). The club with the highest total is the winner of the Gold Cup.

Oshawa has twelve rinks entering the all-day tournament, which will begin August 8 at 9 a.m. Among them will be a rink skipped by Gord McMillan, undoubtedly the best bowler at the club.

McMillan is the champion of both Ontario and Canada in the singles division. He recently represented Canada in international competition in South Africa.

The competition should be good, for both ardent followers of the game and anyone who is interested. The action, once again, kicks off at nine in the morning, in two weeks.

Landers has gone but still haunts Tony's

By Scott Mercer
Sports Writer

When Pete Landers pitched in Oshawa for the Tonys he was undoubtedly one of the best pitchers to be found. Then Landers found himself a new job in Toronto, playing for a new ball team.

After seeing him pitch again last Sunday, it is obvious he has not lost his touch. Behind his superlative pitching, his Toronto Globals downed his ex-teammates by a score of 4-1.

This gave the Globals a slim edge in the seesaw battle between the two for first spot in the Ontario Fastball League.

It was Landers who created the shadow which was to hang over Oshawa on Sunday. His four hit performance raised his season's record to 11 wins and just one loss, that being earlier in the year to Oshawa.

Even in the first inning it was obvious that Landers would be the dominant figure of the game. He put out his first three batters on his way to a game that would see him strike out an amazing total of 17 men, an average just shy of two per inning.

From here all his mates had to do was score runs.

And score they did picking up a run in each of the first two frames. Although Oshawa threatened later on, the game was not in doubt. The Globals sealed it with two runs in the seventh.

Oshawa's only run came on an error by the Toronto catcher, Dennis Gleed. A wild throw to third base bounced into the field, allowing Oshawa's Jack Sneddon to score.

The outcome of the game was still not overly decisive as far as the standings were concerned. The two are still locked in a neck-and-neck struggle for first place which may go down to the last weeks of the season.

Tonys face a busy schedule this coming weekend. Saturday, they must travel to London to face the Dukes. Then they will return to Alexandra Park, where they will meet Niagara Falls on Sunday evening.

Clint Baxter of Oshawa was one of the competitors in a lawn bowling playoffs to determine who would represent District 14 in the provincial finals, to be held in Agincourt on July 28. Lawn bowling, which receives little publicity, is popular with men and women of all ages.

McTeer is high on his Hawkeyes

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

Talking with Bill McTeer, frosh coach of the Junior football Hawkeyes, is like trying to pry a statement from President Nixon on the Watergate affair

McTeer, schooled in USA college ball, is the new mentor of the club and has a funny way with the press when speaking about his football team

"We've got 30 ball players in camp who have come to play" he says "We've got no super stars, just hard workers who want to make the Hawkeyes a winner"

He's a far cry from ex-coach Mike Kirkpatrick who operated the club last summer

McTeer doesn't say much about his players but you can read into his statements he is pleased with the quality of players out, but disappointed in the quantity

"Sure, we're going to have a lot of guys going both ways on defensive and offensive but we'll be a strong contender, he says

A lot of superstars from last year's roster including the Barraags brothers, Brian and Roger, aren't in uniform but they're a real treat to watch

"We don't really care about the players who don't attend the workouts," says McTeer "I'm only interested in the players who are here now. I am building my club around them."

McTeer will be operating the wishbone offense and plans to employ four quarterbacks during the game Paul Nelson Steve Hunt, Jim McQunn and Tom Buchanan

jim shaw

"Some of those guys could be playing other position, but one thing is for sure", says McTeer, "they'll all get a shot at the pivot position

Extra exhibition game for the Hawkeyes comes up Saturday at Civic Field against the Oakville Colts

Looking at the backfield, Preston Henderson and Charlie MacDermaid are working the fullback slots Halfbacks include Jim Barry Mike Beckette Nick Fallon Brian Flankner Dennis Romerie. Linemen are Doug Lowery, Randy Church, Randy Jackson, Ron Brown, Kevin Brennan, Bill Curtis, a big fellow at six-foot four-inches, Bill and Jack Dancey, Al Stewart, Doug Smart, Ken Twinning, and Tom Taylor

Joe Szmenski will probably be the team's kicker

George Zeller, who once held several boxing championships, is looking for youngsters in the area who would like to take up the sport. He hopes that with a little luck, he'll be able to find someone good enough to compete in the 1976 Olympics in Montreal.

Former champion seeks boys interested in boxing

By Jane Milne
Staff Writer

Skipping ropes, gloves and mirrors don't seem like the usual requirements of athletic young boys but for the sport of boxing, they are necessities

Included on the list of equipment of the Oshawa Olympic Boxing Club, these and other articles will become part of the training program for area youngsters

"The objective of our club is go get as many boys as we can from the Oshawa area to train under the National Olympic Development Program in preparation for the 1976 Olympics," says George Zeller, coach and trainer

Although the XXI Olympiad of 1976 in Montreal is still three years away, the Canadian Amateur Boxing Association has already started its program to overcome the 44 year absence of Canadian entries in Olympic boxing competition

As a former boxing competitor with the experience of five Olympic games to his credit Zeller has coached two silver medal winning teams and says he hopes for a gold medal for his Oshawa club

On his own, he fought future heavyweight champion Floyd Patterson the United States representative at the 1952 Helsinki Games was twice the national champion of Europe was the European light-middleweight champion in 1951 and the United States golden gloves champion

"Many people think that boxing is merely two guys bashing each other's head," he says "They are wrong It is all athletic ability blended with speed and excellent physical conditioning."

"Any of our Oshawa boys who have the will to make the national team will be a class A athlete with a physical condition second to none"

Boys over the age of 12 who are interested in becoming members of the club can register at the Civic Auditorium on Saturday, July 21 at 10 a m

Can-Am at the Glen is worth the trip

By Dave Foster
Motorsport Writer

The home of American road racing, Watkins Glen N.Y., will be the scene of the Can-Am this weekend

An excellent track, superb camping facilities, and extra attractions such as go-cart rentals, music concerts and a six-hour road race all make the drive to The Glen well worthwhile.

It's hard to decide which is the major attraction as all signs point towards a combination camping trip and rock concert

That is until Follmer, Donohue, Scheckter, Oliver, Kemp, Cordts, etc., etc., etc. pull their supercharged machines onto the track for the 180 plus mile per hour chase

Many improvements have been made between the time these men were at our own Mosport and now

Hopefully, my sentimental favorite - Jackie Oliver and his U.O.P Shadow, will view the goings on from his car, not from the stands.

If your weekend is free, come on down to the beautiful Finger Lake District to view exotic million dollar men and machinery at their finest

Meet Dean Morgan of the Gaels

In just two years of playing lacrosse, 17-year-old Dean Morgan has certainly progressed. Never having played the game before, he set about to learn it.

With help and encouragement from Al Austin, a teacher at Dean's school and former assistant Gaels' coach he first played last year on the Oshawa Midget all-star club

At the beginning of this year he made a try at the Green Gaels, a big jump to handle in one year

Sent down to the Gaels' Junior "C" team, Dean caught the attention of Green Gaels' scouts. The scouts, impressed with his toughness and ability, gave him several opportunities to play for the parent club. Then, just a few weeks ago, the team announced his signing as a permanent member.

It is certainly remarkable that Morgan who has four more years of junior competition left, has made Oshawa's top team in such a short time

Part of the reason may lie in the fact that he is well-suited for the game. Successful in amateur wrestling, Dean says that he enjoys the rough going

As well as wrestling and lacrosse, Morgan, who has just completed his third year at McLaughlin Collegiate enjoys many other athletic activities Last year, he played hockey for the Port Hope Junior "C" team, and has played both basketball and football at school

In the future, he hopes to finish off his schooling find a spot on a local Junior "B" hockey team and, of course return as a regular for the Gaels

Lucky One pop mart not lucky, just good

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

One of the major advertisers today claims when you're number two, you try harder

But how about when you're not even rated how do you become number one?

This was the problem Ken Courtney, freshmen field manager of Lucky One Pop Mart, inherited when he took over the bossman's job of the city's intermediate ball club

Courtney who has been out of ball since the 1963 season when he performed with Tony's in the Beaches Major Loop, took over a bunch of so-called haven'ts and trouble. markers and moulded them into a top respectable softball club which has caught the fancy of the softball buffs in Oshawa

Last winter when Courtney was talked into the job by Cec Baker he was advised to get rid of a lot of the players who could cause him problems

I really didn't believe all the stories around town about these kids," explained Ken, "and I didn't want to listen to hearsay, so I decided to find out for myself." As it has turned out, Courtney's patience has paid off

Lucky One performs in the City & District Fastball League and plays against teams with a higher caliber rating A major surprise has been Lucky One capturing the Owen Sound senior tournament, winning five straight games and copping the Waterloo tournament, which again featured the top senior teams in the province

Those championships have netted Lucky One $900 which has helped them display one of the most colorful uniforms in the Ontario today

The uniforms consist of a basic white body with blue and red trim. To top this off, players are suited up with red shoes

"I've always wanted to have a smartly-dressed club," said Baker "and I guess I'm a follower of Charlie O Finlay of the Oakland Athletics, and their classy attire

The club raises other money through their excellent sponsors, Len Dorey and Ron Jones, of Lucky One Pop Mart, both ardent softball supporters

Besides the red shoes, the club has red, white and blue sweat bands instead of ball caps. But according to Baker, the team has ordered new caps similar to the Montreal Expos

Each player has individual red bags for travelling to games and the way Baker set up the club off the field makes it look like a major league operation

Back on the diamond, Courtney is the genius but credits fellows like Frank Foley and Wren Blair with whom he played softball for his strategy in his operation of the club today

"They showed me a lot said Courtney, "and I guess I follow the Blair format the best. I used to play hockey and ball for Wren and he's great builder of teams

Courtney has a lot of praise for "Snowball Wilson, his ex-hardball coach

You know," explained Ken, "playing softball and baseball is entirely different. I find that a baseball players seems to be more knowledgable especially about the fundamentals of the game"

Courtney is using his baseball strategy to his advantage and has won at least five games himself by pulling off double steals, hit and runs. Coupled with his uncanny knack of getting to the players, he's getting the most mileage out of them

He has instilled self confidence into the club and claims that within a couple of years, and maybe even next season, he expects them to be playing the Senior 'A' bracket

Courtney has a lot of praise for his "youngsters" but does admit he has had a few trying times with certain players He said once he established that he was the boss, and the only boss, the guys began listening to him and have adopted his ball knowledge 100 per cent.

The team's backbone has to be the pitching staff, comprised of Dave Leaming, who has already tossed a no-hitter this year, and Ray Peters, who is even faster than Leaming

Leaming is the type of chucker who thrives on work and has adopted the Courtney style of coaching which has made him a first rank pitcher

Behind the plate, Dennis Ewart a quiet individual returned to game after a five-year absence and has become the clubs long-ball hitter.

Art Rennick is the backup man and brings lots of experience. He is also capable of playing any other position on the club

In the infield, Brian Myers works at first base Bob Edmonds and Lynn Woods share second, Don Hudgin who Courtney feels is better than his brother Darryl who plays shortstop for Tony's; and Steve Foster at third

Hudgins is enjoying an outstanding season with four triples and a pair of round-trippers

The outfield is made up of Buddy Yahn, a recent acquisition, Ted Taylor Neil Foster, George Redshaw and Russ Korabeck Foster and Redshaw are outstanding hitters

Another major factor is the club's trainer, Georgie Easton, who keeps the club in top shape and is credited with helping both pitchers Leaming and Peters from staying away from sore arms all season

One thing is for sure, the Lucky One Pop Mart team is riding high. So high, it could be the Oshawa club of the future

Hotshot chucker

Dave Leaming is the type of pitcher who thrives on work says Sports Editor Jim Shaw. Leaming is given a lot of the credit for the top form Lucky One has shown in the City and District Fastball League.

Diving is a spiritual thing says one enthusiast

He's had his air shut off at 60 feet and he's had an anchor dropped on him but Brian Evans says he still loves skin diving

It's a great spiritual thing Evans says "It gives you a sense of belonging and silence It's a whole new different world down there just a fantastic feeling

He says he began diving about four years ago Some of his friends used to dive and he decided to try it After he did some, he joined the U S army and was taught rescue diving techniques

Evans says it takes about four weeks of instruction to begin to be a competent diver. He says you have to learn how to handle your equipment swimming techniques the buddy system underwater safety the best equipment to use and a few diving laws like it's unlawful to use a spear gun in fresh water

"Although they really stress the buddy system of diving only with a partner, I like diving alone, so I break that rule continually." he says "I don't believe in clubs I like getting away from everyone That's the main reason I dive. It's a real relief

Perhaps one of the main reason he doesn't like diving in mass groups with a bunch of clowns is because one time he was diving with a friend who decided, just for a gag, to turn off his air supply valve

He was diving in 60 feet of water at the time and his tank had slipped down and got caught in his straps so he couldn't reach the valve to turn it on again He says if it had not been for another friend who came to his rescue, he probably would have drowned

Another time he was diving and a boatman who claimed not to have seen his diving flag dropped an anchor on him He says that scared him a bit too

The funniest thing that has happened to him wasn't at all funny at the time He says he was teaching his wife how to dive and he strapped his tank and weight belt on her and told her not to be afraid just jump in

She did he says and she sank right to the bottom He had forgotten their weight differences and with her wearing his weight belt geared specifically for his weight she became a human stone He says he and a buddy jumped in after her

"She was alright he says But that was the last time she ever wanted to try diving

Evans says it would cost between $300 and $400 to outfit yourself for your first dive and $1 50 each time after that for air

All you need, he says are fins a bathing suit (if you want) a mask snorkle air tanks, weight belt, knife and wet suit He says you can get your air tanks filled at a number of places in the area, although he knows a friend with a compressor who fills his up free

He says a diver doesn't have to be an exceptionally strong swimmer but it helps if he ever gets caught in a current

"I dive all through the summer," he says. "I don't like Lake Ontario because it's too dirty Usually I go to Balsam Lake or Georgian Bay Rice Lake is pretty clear too although there are a lot of weeds Fast flowing streams and rivers are good too "

Brian Evans prepares his gear for a skindiving session.

Elmer's safety contest begins next week

Holidaying school children in This Week's coverage area will have three good reasons to participate in a contest that begins next week

In co-operation with the Ontario Safety League This Week will feature an Elmer the Safety Elephant Contest in which youngsters between the ages of six and 14 can participate

Not only will this help the child to remember the six Elmer safety rules since he has to point out which rule is being broken in the drawing run each week, but it will give him something to do during the summer with another stipulation that he color the picture

And the most important reason from his point of view for entering the contest is that Elmer will be giving away four bicycles each week for the winning entries

There will also be 50 second prizes of combination locks, bells and rear view mirrors

In 1972 according to the OSL 77 pedestrians and 37 cyclists between the ages of five and 14 were killed in traffic accidents in Ontario A further 3,017 pedestrians and 1 656 cyclists were injured

To help reduce these tragic statistics, This Week is pleased to co-sponsor Elmer's 13th annual safety contest

Youngsters in the area are urged to brush up on their safety rules

COMMUNITY STUDIES AND HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT
STARTING THIS SEPTEMBER AT HUMBER COLLEGE OF APPLIED ARTS AND TECHNOLOGY

COMMUNITY STUDIES PROGRAM
6 Semesters
Humber's 6 semester Community Studies Program will provide you with the knowledge and skills necessary for working in those areas involving community and urban studies. Specifically oriented courses will provide you with specialized skills in data gathering, social research analysis and useful evaluation. The program is also action oriented, which will give you practical experience as it deals primarily with the urban communities in Canada.
Successful applicants to the Community Studies program will be involved in Mobile Education projects which will involve an in-depth, live-in analysis of carefully selected communities: for example, Northern Ontario, and Eastern and Western Canada.

HUMAN RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM
6 Semesters
Rapid changes in technology and in the pattern of social relationships have created the need for a program emphasizing the study of human resources. This program will be of interest to anyone who is contemplating a career in community educational business or institutional settings. It would also be of interest to anyone who is interested in learning more about themselves, their environment and the organizations in which they are likely to work
The Human Resources program will introduce students to concepts, values, attitudes and skills in the applied behavioural sciences related to the identification and utilization of human resources in the above settings. We would expect program graduates to seek employment in training and development, administration adult education and community organization
Field practice and optional internships will provide students with opportunities to further develop their skills in interpersonal communication, group dynamics, organizational behaviour, community organization, supervisory relationships, program planning and adult learning, and interviewing and counselling.
FOR FURTHER INFORMATION
Call, write or visit the Office of Community Relations Humber College of Applied Arts and Technology P.O. Box 1900, Rexdale, Ontario
Telephone 677-6810, extensions 302-306.
Fees for the above programs are $125.00 per semester plus $17.50 Student Activity Fee

Is there a life after death?

by Rev. John A. Robb

The popularity of this subject was amply demonstrated on the TV open line locally a few weeks ago

One of our callers even wanted to know if we conceived Heaven to be a place "where cherubs rode around on harps and St Peter kept the guest book!" Probably the first record of such a question is that in Job 14 verse 14 "If a man die, shall he live again?"

It is a question that has troubled thinking people since the advent of time.

Fortunately the Scriptures leave us in no doubt on the entire subject. The Savior stated that He was going away to prepare a place for those who would believe on Him and that He would ultimately return to receive them into that habitation

One of the most common responses that I received in house-to-house visitation is that inasmuch as nobody has ever come back to tell us, we have no way of knowing if there is life after death.

My inevitable reply to this is that the only reason that I am standing on their doorstep is because One (Jesus Christ) has returned victorious over death and because He has conquered the same, we need only pass through the shadow thereof with the sting having been removed!

A casual reader of the New Testament cannot fail to be impressed with the vast number of verses dealing with life after death. The greatest resurrection chapter in the whole Bible is 1 Corinthians, Chapter 15 where the subject of sowing and reaping is set forth in detail together with the inherent differences between the mortal body and that which will be evident after the resurrection.

The plain teaching of Scripture both to the dying thief and through Paul in 2 Corinthians 5 Verse 8, is that at the moment of death the soul and spirit of the believer is present with the Lord while a re-uniting with the body shall await the Second Coming of Christ.

Events at the Transfiguration scene would seem to indicate that Moses and Elias were alive and were not just re-constituted for the occasion

Death for the born-again believer is likened in Scripture to a sleep. For a child to fall asleep in the back seat of Dad's car and wake up in Montreal to which the parent drove through the night, is not a traumatic experience!

To the question before the house we shall answer an unequivocal "Yes" and add furthermore that choices made in this life will determine the destiny in the next

For this cause Paul the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles if ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you ward how that by revelation He made known unto me The Mystery that by the Spirit the Gentiles should be fellow heirs and of the same body, and partakers of His promise in Christ by the gospel whereof I was made a minister according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of His power Unto me who am less than the least of all saints is this grace given that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ and to make all men see what is the dispensation of the mystery which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God who created all things by Jesus Christ to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God according to the eternal purpose which He purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord Eph 3 1-11 with the parenthesis concerning the mystery of Christ left out

And you that were sometime alienated and enemies in your mind by wicked works yet now hath He reconciled in the body of His flesh through death, to present you holy and unblameable and unreproveable in His sight if ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven whereof I Paul am made a minister who now rejoice in my sufferings for you and fill up that which is behind of the afflictions of Christ in my flesh for His body's sake which is the church whereof I am made a minister according to the dispensation of God which is given to me for you, to fulfill the Word of God even The Mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations but now is made manifest to His saints to whom God would make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles which is Christ in you the hope of glory whom we preach warning every man and teaching every man in all wisdom that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus Col 1 21-28

This mystery and its revelation completes or fulfills the Word of God We never could stop at the Revelation for it only shows Christ forth as King of kings and Lord of lords in respect to the earth The Word of God is not completed till we see that Christ is not only Head of the church but Head of all things in heaven and in earth Eph 1 10 Paul who finishing the canon of Scripture as we have it [illegible] anything else equally beautiful but anything else equally [illegible] the Word

It was a mystery or secret never before known or suspected It is not found even by type in the OT Neither can it be found in the witness of the stars or signs of the zodiac Satan had known well enough that there was an earthly program and that some day the heel of the Seed would crush his head, but he did not know that his domain, the heavens, would come under the rule of the Seed and a church of which He was to be the Head He now knows!

DeHart blasts McArthur on McLaughlin Square

By Garnet Cowsill
Staff Writer

Misleading, premature and ill-timed statements were made by planning board chairman Ald. Bruce McArthur about the proposed McLaughlin Square project, charges Ald John DeHart.

The statements, made public by "a small, local daily newspaper", were confidential and should not have been released until the information was before planning board, DeHart says.

"However," DeHart says, "McArthur has made some of the information public knowledge so I therefore believe a few corrections are in order so the taxpayers of Oshawa are not led down the garden path."

DeHart says McArthur was quoted as saying the project, to be developed on the west portion of General Motors north plant, will consist of "one block square".

"First of all, we are talking about two blocks and not one," DeHart says. "But more important, the developer in his plans is asking for 91,000 square feet of office space while the planning staff is suggesting only 30,000 square feet be allowed for office space."

That point makes a tremendous difference, he says, especially when developers say the project is going to cost between $10 and $11 million.

DeHart says McArthur was also quoted as saying the cost to the city to service the operation including road widening and sewers, will be substantial.

"This is the most misleading statement by McArthur," DeHart charges. "I'm sure the taxpayers will be happy to learn they will not be burdened by additional taxes to service the development."

He points out that a report by works and operations Commissioner Fred Crome recommends that all services, including sanitary sewers, storm sewers, water mains, electrical services, roads and sidewalks should be paid for by the developer and should not come out of the taxpayers' pockets.

The planning and development staff have also laid down some guidelines for the project, DeHart says.

Some of them suggest that not more than 15 per cent of the total apartment units be used by families with elementary school children in light of the school facilities in the downtown area; the minimum landscaped area at ground level be 70 per cent of the total area of the site; and off-street parking be provided on the basis of 1.13 spaces per dwelling unit plus the number of space for commercial uses equal to the spaces to be provided for such uses under the off-street parking bylaw in other commercial areas.

"The guidelines alone would probably deter any developer from proceeding with the development under the present conditions that have been suggested by both the planning staff and the works and operations staff," DeHart says.

While DeHart says he disagrees with McArthur's statement that the development will be of considerable cost to the city, he also says that some of the present "restrictions" will have to be removed for the development to make it a viable and economical project.

"The final decision will have to be reached by city council with citizen participation a must," DeHart says. "Because of the far-reaching effects this will have on future downtown development . . . it will be the biggest decision ever made by any Oshawa city council."

Details of the enormous residential-hotel-office project have been almost secret up till now, but it is expected that the developers of the complex McLaughlin Square Inc. will hold a press conference sometime this week to release details.

Is the city trying to turn Oshawa into an industrial slum?

Any legislative measure which would raise the cost of housing should be defeated

To do so not only makes good common sense, but under present conditions where most young Canadians are facing a shelter crisis, it becomes a moral obligation

Councillors will soon be considering a staff proposal to the works and operation committee to levy arterial road construction taxes of close to $2,000 against each new homebuyer

Some councillors argue that those people who cause arterial road construction, namely new homebuyers, should be made to pay for it

But there are too many things wrong with the levy proposal to make their argument valid

Oshawa and district builders say the levy will raise the cost of every home currently on the market. This makes sense. If new car prices go up by several hundred dollars, so do the prices of used cars. The same would happen with houses.

At a time when new homes in Oshawa are averaging $42,000, to arbitrarily increase that cost by $2,000 would be completely unjustifiable

The city has never been, nor will it ever be, that poor that it could not find the money needed for arterial road construction through the general levy

Many established homeowners may well say the city's debenture debt is already too high and arterial road construction adds to it, so why not let the struggling young family pay for it right off the bat when they buy themselves a home

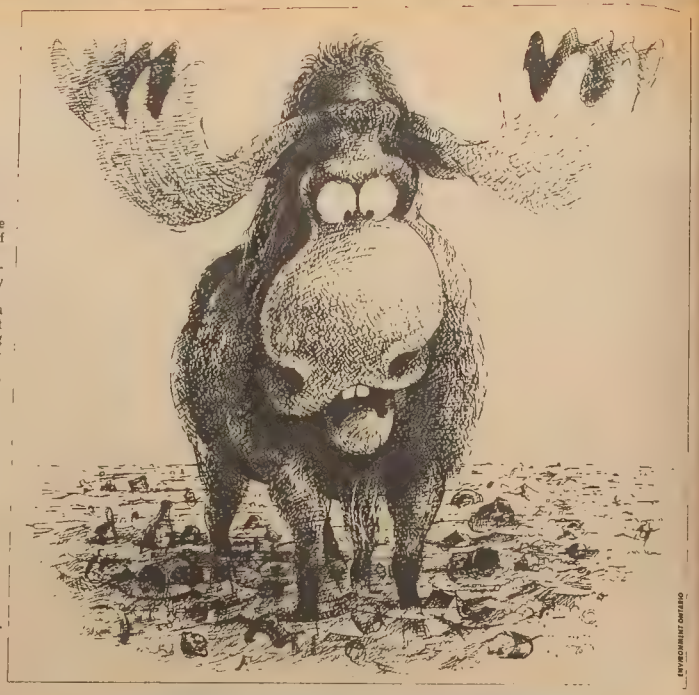
But if we were to go back 20 or 30 years when the established homeowners were buying their homes and city council proposed the same levy, there would no doubt have been a cry of indignation so mighty it would have blown that city council right out of city hall's back door.

Such a noble staff recommendation too! But just think if the levy was implemented two years ago Staff would have built up such a reserve fund, councillors wouldn't have thought twice about passing the now infamous John Street extension.

Surely this rich and affluent city can afford a few extra dollars towards arterial road construction so the young couples desiring homes of their own can realize this dream.

The final decision lies with the politicians, many of whom say slow down residential development and bring in industry and commerce

Surely if they stopped for a moment and thought seriously about the matter, they would realize that a city without residential development soon turns into an industrial slum.



ONTARIO ENVIRONMENT

This summer, keep Ontario beautiful.

Apathy can kill you

There's an old joke that goes something like this: "Johnny what's apathy?"

"I don't know and I couldn't care less." Which is as good a way as any of our pointing out a very dangerous type of apathy that the modern apartment dweller has allowed himself to be overcome by

We're referring of course to the situation as pointed out in an article elsewhere in this issue where residents of high-rise apartment buildings are living in virtual death traps because they're so high up in the air that no ladder truck in the world could reach them

Just how apathetic these people are was pointed out by a fire inspector during the interview for the story. He invited the residents of one large area high rise to a fire safety talk in their building and only a handful of the several hundred residents showed up.

The frustrating thing about the situation is that there doesn't seem to be one particular group to point the finger of blame at and thereby come up with a suggestion for solving the problem.

You can't really blame the builders (and Lord knows there are enough people taking potshots at them these days). They have a set of regulations to comply with set down by the various levels of government.

And the various government levels seem to have tried to make the high-rises as safe as they can with the materials available.

With living accommodation at a premium, one really can't blame the individual for agreeing to live on the 12th or 15th floor of an apartment building

And with the cost of land what it is today, it would be ludicrous to suggest that high rises be restricted to six floors or however high an aerial ladder could reach

So the only thing we can do is keep our fingers crossed that a fire doesn't break out in one of the buildings or, if it does, that the residents on the upper floors are able to follow the safety routines set down and escape injury.

But the only way they can hope to have even a chance of escape is by making themselves familiar with these routines

Otherwise, their apathy could prove fatal.

Unpolished

Horace Greeley may be famous for saying: "Go west, young man" but Fred Crome, Oshawa's commissioner of works, will go down in history as having done something about it.

With the placing of one small sign, Crome's department has made certain that that is exactly what many Oshawa motorists and visitors to the city will do.

If you drive in the Bloor Street-Park Road area, you no doubt already know what we're talking about. And rather than curse generally at the city for its stupidity, from now on, you can hurl your expletives at friend Crome

His department is repairing Park Road just north of the Highway 401 overpass and has shown a monumental lack of foresight by placing the sign indicating that the road is closed so close to the construction that the motorist has no alternative but to turn left onto the 401 westbound exit lane and head back onto the highway.

If you know the area, you can get back on the right track by taking the Thickson Road North exit – after having travelled about five miles out of your way. But visitors unfamiliar with the area would probably keep right on going back to Toronto if they had taken the Park Road exit off the 401 hoping to get into Oshawa.

For some time now, the city has seemed to be trying to discourage residential growth in Oshawa. But the works department seems to be carrying things a bit far by actually tricking people into leaving.

the mainliner

It's nice every once in awhile to discover that politicians are human after all and suffer the same problems the rest of us do -- like the generation gap. Take Oshawa Mayor Jim Potticary for instance. We're told that his son was working in one of the booths at the Oshawa Fair despite the fact that the mayor strongly advocated at last week's council meeting that the popular annual event be done away with.

One area youngster who plans to attend university in Toronto this fall went apartment hunting last week and found what he and his roommate considered a perfect spot for $200 a month. They made out a cheque for the first month's rent and were walking down the sidewalk when the rental agent ran after them to tell them he had just had a call from the landlord informing him that rents had just gone up to $225. They're still looking

One of the best-kept secrets in the province at press time was the identity of the chairman of the new region. Some heavy betting is understood to be going on among politicians, but even Charlie McIlveen, MPP, says he really doesn't know who it will be. In fact, he says John White's "right hand", one Donald Irvine doesn't know. Oh well, perhaps John White doesn't know either and at an opportune moment he'll pull out from under his sweater the name of the lucky winner.

An area cocktail lounge still has an archaic approach to what it will allow its patrons to wear. A sign on the wall says no blue jeans allowed. Does this mean if a fellow showed up wearing regular pants and no shirt, he'd be let in? And if a fellow in blue jeans wanted to stop off for three or four Scotches, would he be turned away in favor of the other fellow in slacks whose intentions were to sip on one draft while listening to the entertainment for a whole evening?

Editor Tom Douglas bought a pair of shoes in Spain a couple of years ago for $5 and got a lot of wear out of them until a few weeks ago when he took them into an Oshawa shoemaker for new soles and heels -- which set him back $7.50. There's a moral there somewhere.

Word has it that a mailman in the area is so fed up with delivering mail to one particular house that he's thinking of quitting. The house is rented by five able-bodied young people, each of them on unemployment insurance. Every two weeks, the mailman drops off five unemployment insurance cheques worth a total of close to $1,000 to the group as they sit on the front steps of the house swigging beer. The mailman, not much older than the recipients, wonders whether he wouldn't be smart to quit his job and do the same thing.

Cafik road improved

Norm Cafik has come into his own

In the past, we have occasionally chided the Ontario Riding Member of Parliament for statements he has made on various issues, our motivation, in part, being that he seemed to be making the statements without really thinking the matter through.

But this no longer seems to be the case. Of late, Cafik has come across as a very polished politician, both in his actions in the House of Commons and in public.

A good example of this was his appearance on Channel 19's Background program last week. The program took the form of a panel discussion on the proposed Pickering international airport, but it was a panel in name only.

Mark Harrison, executive editor of the Toronto Star, rather than act as moderator as he was supposed to do, sided with the other panel member Dr. Charles Godfrey of the People or Planes group, throughout the half-hour program.

Together, Harrison and the POP man fired inane comments at Cafik and he in turn fielded them with ease.

Anyone who was sitting on the fence over the airport controversy might well be temped to step down on the side of those in favor of it after watching Cafik handle himself on that program.

Our hero.. a bus driver who pulled it over

by tom douglas

With Richard Nixon on the verge of impeachment, Pierre Trudeau hanging onto power by his fingernails and Roger Moore playing James Bond, we really don't have many heroes to look up to.

That probably explains why the public has taken such a fancy to that bus driver out in Calgary who parked his bus at curbside during rush hour last week and decided to call it quits.

In so doing, he left 40 commuters stranded until the transit company could get another driver out to take over.

This action got front-page treatment in the Toronto papers and a subsequent story quoted the driver as saying that he has received calls and letters from all over Canada congratulating him for doing what he did.

He explained his actions to one reporter by saying that a woman on the bus was heckling about the service the company gave and a man was complaining loudly about the way the driver handled the bus.

So he just up and parked the machine and told the hecklers they could bloody well drive it themselves.

There's a bit of the Walter Mitty in all of us that treasures a story like that. Each of us at some time or other has wanted to tell the boss to stick it or to tell off a cheeky salesgirl or officious public servant.

Most of us, however, don't have the intestinal fortitude to do so and thus anybody who does it becomes a hero in our eyes -- unless of course you happened to be one of those 40 passengers stuck on the bus.

Something similar apparently happened in Oshawa a few years ago. As the story goes, a young General Motors worker was about to go on shift and was just walking through the plant gate when he began asking himself why he should have to put up with the boredom of the particular job he had.

He stopped dead in his tracks and yelled: "To hell with it!" or words to that effect as he hurled his baloney bucket at the timekeeper's shack.

Needless to say, he was cheered and applauded by the other fellows going through the gate as he turned around and walked back to the bus stop to go home.

We columnists get feeling that way every once in awhile as well. When our weekly deadline approaches, we think of all sorts of reasons why we shouldn't have to sweat over the typewriter: nobody appreciates it anyway, we're underpaid and overworked, the boss doesn't realize the great talent he has working for him.

As a matter of fact, what the hell am I doing writing this stupid thing in the first place? I think I'll just

Mink makes her faint

Contact's aim is to bring the consumer and the businessman together when there's a misunderstanding and that's exactly what happened last week. Here, Staff Writer Garnet Cowsill (right) talks over a paving problem with John Maracle of Oshawa Quality Construction (left) and Oshawa homeowner Art Rutter.

Sir:

As you know, I contacted your paper some months ago concerning a problem I was having with a mink ranch right next door to me. Well, the problem still exists and my children are still getting sick from the odor and I myself have passed out from it. Is there nothing that can be done about this type of thing.

Mrs. V. White
RR 2, Oshawa

During our initial discussion with you, we contacted Ed Broadbent MP, the ministry of the environment and attempted to get in touch with your MPP Alex Carruthers. Unfortunately nothing could be done to assist you at that time.

When you contaced us the second time last week, we got in touch with Darlington Township Reeve Garnet Rickard. Again we were told that nothing could be done and that the matter rested with you and your neighbor.

It appears that the problem you are having is one of the drawbacks of moving into an agriculturally-zoned area. The smell may well be there, but your neighbor by our information is complying with ministry of environment standards, is complying with zoning bylaws and for all intents and purposes is well within his rights.

It may be a small consolation but you are not the only contact we have had regarding mink ranches in recent months. It seems a family in Whitby is in the same boat. Perhaps team action is the answer.

Highrise firedanger worries firefighters

By Garnet Cowsill
Staff Writer

If fire traps you and your family in an apartment unit above the sixth storey, the chances of being rescued by the fire department are almost nil

First in a series

And yet, there are more than 1,000 people, children and adults, living above the sixth floor in about 15 high-rise apartment buildings in Oshawa alone

One Oshawa firefighter is so aware of the danger of his family and himself living in a 10th floor apartment suite that he keeps a 40-foot rope on his balcony just in case

The rope, of course won't take him and his family to ground-level safety, but it will get them to the sixth floor where firemen can, hopefully, reach them with an aerial ladder truck

According to Oshawa Alderman George Drynan, the city's fire department cannot fight fires adequately above the sixth floor with present equipment His statement is backed up by Oshawa Fire Chief Ernie Stacey and the city's fire prevention officer, Bob Sledziewski

"High rise is a universal threat from Hong Kong to North America," Drynan says "It's a world-wide menace and part of it is right here in the Durham Region Millions of people are living on the brink of disaster, and they don't really care."

"We won't go so far as to say it's a 'threat'," says Sledziewski, "but we certainly are concerned. High rise tenant education of fire prevention is the biggest problem we have"

A recent second floor high rise apartment fire brought the problem dramatically to the forefront again. Although there was no loss of life, firemen estimate there was $45,000 damage

"It could have been a lot more serious had it been at night, or on the third or fourth floor," says Stacey "The building wasn't evacuated. People had fire alarm protection and they didn't use it."

So what could the fire department do if you and your family were trapped by fire on your eighth, or 10th, or 18th-floor balcony?

"Well, " says the chief "we could come down from the top of the building with ropes, or maybe come up from the bottom swinging ladders from balcony to balcony, but that would depend on weather and building conditions and the fire No two fires are exactly alike

Taking the average human being under the average circumstance, which is verging on panic, any regional margin of success (of rescue) would be extremely small," says Drynan. "Don't forget that the firefighters would be dealing with people who, in all probability, would be in hysterics. I've seen cases where it has taken three grown men to handle a single, frightened woman."

Even the two veteran firemen have to admit that if a complete floor was engulfed in flames, having firefighters work up the building from balcony to balcony "would be a slow process"

Even if you were below the sixth floor where the aerial truck could reach you, to do so, says Stacey firefighters would have to have unrestricted access to your side of the building and there would have to be perfect conditions for us to get right in there to rescue and put out the fire"

That means if you live on a side of an apartment building where there are no paved sections and no real access for the fire truck your chances of being rescued again diminish

Most high rise apartment buildings are being constructed in such a way as to prevent fire from spreading from one unit to another for about two hours

But let's say the fire was across the corridor to you According to Sledziewski all you would have to do is open the door to your apartment and the 1,000-degree heat from the fire across the hall would kill you

"There are more deaths from smoke inhalation and super-heated air than from actual fire," he says

Fire statistics show that if you lived on the 18th floor of an apartment building, with other occupants evacuation at the same time as you, it would take you 7-½ minutes to walk down the stairs to safety—if you could make it. In a 30-storey apartment building, a person living on the 30th floor couldn't get out in less than an hour The most frightening statistic of all is that everyone in their lifetime will have one fire

High rise apartment buildings in Ontario are designed for fire safety and are constructed of fire resistive materials and the suites are separated by solid masonry walls and floors to lessen the danger of fire spread from one suite to another

They have fire resistant construction, a fire alarm system, interior fire escape stairways and interior water supplies for fighting fires

But still, fire happens

If you have a fire in your suite, the fire department recommends that you alert everyone in the suite call the fire department; leave your suite and close the doors; sound the fire alarm in the corridor leave your floor via the stairways but never use the elevator

If you are informed of a fire: stop what you are doing, unplug all appliances, check corridor for smoke, and if it is clear, leave your building via the stairway closing the door behind you

If the corridor is impassable: keep your door closed; stand on the balcony or by an open window and signal your position by waving

Above all, wait to be rescued and don't panic

In a fire resistant building you are safer in your suite with doors closed than attempting to escape through fire and smoke

Right on target!

Training officer Art Forsythe hits the middle of the net during a practice session of the Oshawa fire department. Unfortunately, it would be a long drop for residents of some of the area's high rise apartments.

I should have stood in bed is self-advicewhen burglar arrives

If a burglar breaks into your home and wakes you up, the best thing to do is stay in bed, advises Oshawa Police Det Trevor McCagherty

Every citizen has the right to protect his or her own property, and although waiting for the burglar to leave may sound cowardly, it is by far the safest thing to do, the detective says

"I do not recommend that people who have firearms in their homes confront a burglar," McCagherty says "The reason is that the burglar may well disarm the person and end up injuring him"

That may all be fine and dandy if the burglar has no intentions of harassing you, but just how far can the average person go in trying to protect his life and property today?

"Any person may protect his property, and he's entitled to use as much force as is necessary to do so providing such force is reasonable, having regard to the circumstances that transpired" he says

"However," he adds, "if a person shoots a 10-year-old burglar in broad daylight and the burglar represented no real threat then that would in all probability be considered excessive force The amount of force necessary is usually dictated by each individual case

If a person who is violating another person's property rights is injured or killed by the property owner, McCagherty says there is always a full police investigation

Charges, in most cases, would be laid against the person who injured or killed, depending on the circumstances, he says

"There is the general philosophy that when something happens that takes a life, it is usually deserving of a public hearing," McCagherty says. "The police would invariably consult with the Crown Attorney for his advice The charges could range from assault to non-capital murder"

In such cases, he says, it is not really the police who decide to lay charges as in most other cases, but the Crown Attorney who is presented with the facts and, as a qualified prosecutor, decides what course to pursue. The coroner might also have a say in the decision he says

As of the end of June, McCagherty says there were 107 residential break and enters in Oshawa in 1973. By far, he says, the majority of them would have taken place in empty or unoccupied homes

But, if you ever hear or see someone trespassing on your property, do not hesitate to call the police at once (579-1234) and officers will attend immediately

"In the event that a burglar is in your home," he says, "the police should be contacted, but only if that can be done safely, without placing lives in peril."

If you can't get to your telephone safely, try to remain calm and not make any noise. As soon as the burglar leaves, report it to police

SWEEP expects record tonnage

Cleaning up after people can be discouraging, says Ren Siblock senior supervisor with Project Sweep.

Sweep is a provincially-financed student summer employment project sponsored by the local conservation authorities and includes everthing from doing watershed studies to cleaning up creeks and highways.

The worst part of the job, says Siblock, is the cleaning up because just one hour after a stretch of highway has been done the litter is there again.

The fact that the litter is back so soon after the area has been cleaned isn't half as unbelievable as what the Sweep crews find, says Siblock

The crews cleaning up the Oshawa Creek valley area, he says, have found a truck cab, mufflers, parts of fences and in one case, actually found a dune-buggy

On the stretch of Taunton Road between Oshawa and Highway 115, which Siblock describes as the "worst road in the area", the crew collected 200 pounds of litter, part of which included five mattresses

The way things are shaping up this year, he says, he expects the tonnage of garbage to top the totals reached in the first two years of the project

Two years ago, the 31-member team collected 90 tons of garbage in this area. Last year this jumped to 120 tons and this year so far the crews have collected nearly 40 tons. Early indications lead Siblock to believe that this year's total will easily pass the 120-ton mark set last year

It's not an easy job, he says, but somebody has to do it and that is why Sweep was set up.

Acting as a summer garbage collection agency is only part of the work done by Sweep. Other students in the project are involved in doing studies of creeks in the area

One such study is being done on the Oshawa Creek to determine if conditions are suitable to stock the creek with trout. Another study on the Lynde Creek in Whitby is being conducted to determine the effects of that environment on the people in the area from the physical and cultural standpoint

With all this work to be done over the summer, Siblock admits the job is really too much for Sweep alone to handle and says that help is needed from local municipalities

The help he has in mind isn't so much added manpower, but equipment The crews now have only hand-tools and muscle-power to complete the task

What they need, he says, is more specialized equipment such as front-end loaders and large trucks to haul away the debris pulled from the creek areas

He says the crews will do as much as they can at present with the equipment they have, mainly half-ton trucks, and try to get some co-operation from the municipalities later on

The project is being carried out in the area bounded by the Whitby-Pickering Township line in the west, to Highway 115 in the east and bounded by the ridges to the north

Arterial road levy would add close to $2,000 to the cost of all homes

Council's proposed arterial road levy will increase the cost of every Oshawa house on the market, and Oshawa an District Builders' Association brief says.

The brief, which is to be presented to the city's works and operation committee for its consideration before making the levy recommendation to council, opposes the new tax

The levy, initially a staff recommendation to the committee, works on the principle that the people who cause arterial road construction—new homebuyers moving into the area—should be made to pay for that construction

Mike Kassinger, president of the builders' association says builders would initially be made to pay the levy, but they in turn would pass along the cost to new homebuyers

The levy would increase the cost of a single family dwelling by $1,700 and a semi-detached by $1,900 per dwelling unit There would be an increase of $950 per dwelling unit for an apartment building

'Another detrimental factor of the proposed imposition of levies for arterial road construction is that the ensuing increase in the cost of new homes will automatically increase the selling price of all other homes in Oshawa" the brief claims

It is a basic economic principle that an increase in the selling price of any commodity increases the price of those units already on the market and this action would contribute to inflation

The brief suggest that although the levy was no doubt formulated "in the best interests of the citizens such a levy would in fact have exactly the opposite effect" by artificially inflating the price of both new and older homes currently on the market

' To pay for the construction of arterial roads would doubtlessly put the purchase of a home beyond the reach of many residents who have as much right to their own homes as those present homeowners who were not forced to assume this added financial burden when they purchased their homes," the brief says

The builders point out that to the many Oshawa residents who are hoping to one day purchase their own homes, it might appear that council is taking deliberate steps to discourage them from doing so at a time when both other senior government levels are taking positive action to widen the base of home ownership in Canada

In the brief the builders wonder if all the ramifications of implementing the levy have been taken into consideration by the drafters of the proposal

The brief asks that if the levy were implemented would the provincial government still pay its share of arterial road construction in the form of grants?

When This Week took the same question to Finance Commissioner Frank Markson, he said he would make no comment on the matter and suggested we take the issue to Fred Crome, works and operations head.

Crome was very hesitant to answer the question, but finally said

They (the province) would refuse" "They're not funding all construction now, it's only limited funding and that's one of the problems If they provided unlimited subsidy, perhaps But they're not providing enough now

The builders also consider the levy premature since the entire scheme of things could change once regional government takes over the area

'Perhaps with regional government, the alleged need for such a proposal would disappear entirely,' the brief says "We also wonder whether the funds, if collected, would pay for arterial roads in the entire region or if used soley in Oshawa, the grant given to the city would be reduced accordingly "

The brief also wonders about the equity of the levy when $1,700 is required for single family dwellings, but $200 more per unit is required for semi-detached dwellings

To make new home purchasers pay the cost of the arterial roads is like decreeing that only those who are sick should be made to pay the operating costs of the Oshawa General Hospital or that only those whose houses catch fire should bear the expense of maintaining the Oshawa Fire Department

The brief urges the committee to reconsider the levy and suggests that arterial road construction costs be paid for out of the general tax levy

Mayor spoke without thinking

Mayor Jim Potticary spoke before he knew what he was talking about says Dave Godley

Godley, a partner in G and G Electronics of Oshawa, made the comment in reply to an article in This Week in which the mayor said the Oshawa Fair was set up each year so that the Toronto-based rides operator, Conklin Shows, could make money on the midway

"Conklin puts a lot of money into this city," says Godley "He's got us doing all his sound equipment and its maintenance for him and we're not the only ones in town he gives business to "

Godley estimates that while the Conklin Shows are in town local merchants make between $10,000 and $25,000 He says the people with Conklin rides buy food, gas, tools lumber, hardware, paint and all sorts of goods and services

"I don't think the mayor was aware of what was going on," he says. "I think he spoke before he knew what he was talking about What I read into the mayor's statements was that Conklin is a crook and he's coming in here with his hand out But the carnival ride business is becoming a sophisticated industry now

He maintains that if Conklin didn't set up his midway at the fair each year it wouldn't attract even half the people it does

"The fair board wouldn't get the money at the gate if Conklin wasn't there to draw them" he says

On the other hand, Godley says he agrees that the buildings used at Alexandra Park for fair purposes "are a disgrace" and should be torn down

Alexandra Park he says has been used as the fair grounds ever since he can remember and perhaps it is time for the fair to relocate to a larger site

HAVE YOU HAD YOUR VITAMIN H TODAY?

Don't tell us you have never heard of Vitamin H? What about Vitamin U? Or Vitamin P47 These are some of the "rare vitamins" which nevertheless play an important role in nutrition Vitamin U for example is found in cabbages and is believed to be an anti-ulcer factor Then there are vitamins B13, M and T. These may not be available on the shelves today but in the future may play a part in disease treatment or prevention

There is more to vitamins than you might think So, do not take vitamin preparations indiscriminately Rely on expert advice.

Registrar would have a field day in Whitby – reader

Sir:

The alleged impropriety linking two Pickering real estate firms with questionable selling activities in connection with a Scarborough home sold twice within 10 days may point up the need for an investigation by the Ontario Registrar of the activities of a few other real estate firms in the Pickering, Ajax and Whitby area

Possibly the explosive growth of this area has encouraged the abuse of ethical selling practices by a few unscrupulous firms who scurry after commissions without regard for client or community

I suspect this might be the case, particularly in Whitby, where prices, for example, often meet comparable Toronto listings. Meanwhile Oshawa prices remain noticeably lower than in Whitby

For over a year now several Whitby real estate firms have, in my view, been bidding the asking prices of homes far above their realistic market value. Pricing often bears no visible relationship to property condition or location

The motive may be sheer greed However, the motive in some cases may be the same as the one alleged in the Scarborough instance.

The Ontario Registrar should consider coming to Whitby for a couple of days. He might just discover a goldmine of impropriety!

Peace council seeks members

Sir:

In Oshawa this past month, there has been a revival of the Oshawa Peace Council

This council has set its goals along the lines of world peace and trying to build awareness of the urgency of humanitarian efforts in resolving world problems.

The council has united people of the community such as teachers, students, political activists, workers, and theologians

The last peace council was united in 1966 concerning the ending to the war in Vietnam, and lasted for some time into the next year

Today this council unites around the reconstruction of Vietnam, the end of nuclear testing above ground, and the freeing of political prisoners throughout the world

The first task of the council is to unite people around the ending of the nuclear testing about to begin in France, and by writing a letter of protest to the French Embassy

Anyone interested in helping the council should call Barbara Elliott at 725-2363

Hair is relative

Sir:

Re the interesting hair controversy, the following should also be considered

Long hair, as an American evangelist has suggested, is a trend to break down the true manliness of the male

Moreover, men's clothing and accessories are being designed on the lines of feminine fashion, with lace shirts, flowered pants, high-heeled shoes, beads, purses, hair bands, pony tails, et al., all "unisex" symbols

As we know, it is sometimes difficult to recognize, even from a short distance, whether a particular person is a male or a female

Another writer makes this pertinent statement: The Bible does reveal the long and short of hair. If a man's hair is long enough to resemble that of a woman, it is too long

Also, if a woman's hair is short enough to resemble man's, it is too short. So it's a relative matter

Reed shares egg

Sir:

In the "After Hours" section of your last edition it was indicated that Ed. Starr, secretary of the Ontario ministry of agriculture and food, spoke at an Oshawa Chamber of Commerce luncheon last Wednesday

It is a fact that Mr. Starr was scheduled to speak at this affair, but at almost the last minute the Chamber luncheon was cancelled due to lack of public support.

Consequently, while Mr. Starr gave the substance of his address to your reporter ahead of time, circumstances did not permit him to deliver the address at this function.

My purpose in writing is to explain to your readers that your publication wraps up its copy, normally, on a Monday and prints on a Tuesday. Therefore, it was impossible to kill the story at the time the luncheon was cancelled

I'm not sure that too many of your readers are aware of your deadline time and, because of this, might feel that you were attempting to mislead. If you

wound up with egg on your face, then that mixture properly belongs on mine

I met some weeks ago with the executive of the South Ontario Agricultural Society and, as a public service, offered to sponsor a luncheon meeting to help in any way we could in publicizing the Oshawa Fair.

The executive of the S.O.A.S. are competent, dedicated people, and while they were enthusiastic for the luncheon, it turned out that our members, some of their members, and the rural-urban community in general, did not show any particular interest in attending.

The decision to cancel was made with some regret, but we do not regret having tried

There was a happy ending to the story, and I feel it shows the courage of the S.O.A.S. executive who did hold a small, informal luncheon, sans speaker, on the Wednesday

I attended this luncheon and enjoyed the content of the program including the preview of the Miss Oshawa Fair beauty contest.

Al Reed,
Executive Director
Oshawa Chamber of Commerce.

Sees sparring match

Sir:

I call your attention to the regional government hassle and the pending fate of our municipal airport at Oshawa

For over 30 years the city fathers have ignorned the possibilities of their own municipal airport and have now "boxed it in" with housing, much to the delight of developers and tax collectors

This having been done, the new homeowners and the airport officials are left as sparring partners in a no-decision fight about noise and the right to free enterprise

"Boxed in" - that is a familiar phrase. Didn't the chief executive of our city recently say that about Oshawa in the regional plan? Now the city fathers know what boxed in is - compare it with the Oshawa municipal airport

To be candid about local politics, the views and - or opinions expressed by the city fathers are not necessarily the reflection of the majority of the people living in and around Oshawa

It seems the motto "plan ahead" did not and does not apply regarding general aviation here We are still applying horse and buggy logic in an age of enlightenment

As I mentioned inan earlier letter, we have missed our chance to enrich the business cocommunity by making Oshawa the crossroad for air transportation of ggoods and people via a Short Take-Off and Landing airport right in Oshawa

By the way, the airport was a veritable gift from the federal government which the city now wants to use as a land bank - how about that !

Chairman - Airport Development Delegation

Sorry they're essential

Sir:

In view of the essential role which Canada's railway employees perform in Canada's economic life we hope you will understand and sympathize with our position

We have sent copies of our booklet "We're Sorry We're Essential" to all members of the House of Commons and the Senate We hope that they will realize that our problem is political and economic and take action accordingly

We have negotiated without success. Public hearings and private mediation by the conciliation board have not produced any agreement

We hope that the board's recommendations will be helpful but, in view of past experience, we cannot be optimistic. Our employers, the railway companies, know that at the end of our our token "bargaining", Parliament will step in to end any serious financial loss caused by the railway employees' refusal to work under company-proposed conditions

The railway companies know that in any settlement dictated by compulsory arbitration, the amount will be politically motivated. Unless there is a major change in government attitude, the amount will be "average"

"Average" settlements are politically safe and can be safely labelled "non-inflationary". But, as we know all too well, "average" settlements are always behind the times

Another "average" settlement this year will not help us catch up what we have lost as a result of past "average" settlements

We hope you will agree that the time has come for our political leaders to enunciate a new policy for Canadians whose work is so essential that it cannot be permitted to stop and who, as a result, cannot use their bargaining power effectively

We hope your readers will support our claim that employees in such essential occupations should be entitled to a more equitable standard

We hope you will use your influence to insist upon a serious re-appraisal of past government policy. We would also appreciate your comments

Chairman
Associated Non-Operating Railway Unions

CLOCA has stepped in to delay Midtown expansion

Whether or not the Midtown Mall will be allowed to expand is still up in the air, says Paul Wagner, representative of Select Properties in Toronto, which owns the mall

Wagner says the company had hoped to begin construction of a 19-000-square-foot addition to the mall by early spring or late summer of this year but the intervention of the Central Lake Ontario Conservation Authority has put the project behind schedule

The whole matter of the expansion being allowed followed action by the authority which led to the closing down of the Pop People plant adjacent to the mall

The authority took action against the Pop People operation because their building did not meet the standards required by the authority for structures built on a flood plain.

Wagner says his company is expecting to hold further meetings with the authority over the matter and in the meantime, is conducting engineering studies with regard to the affect of the flood plain issue on the expansion.

Simultaneously, he says the company is looking into all legal aspects of the matter and any possible alternatives but so far nothing has been finalized

The expansion was to include 3,000 square feet of mall space and a 15,-000-square-foot Family Fair chain store

Dave Smith, supervisor of conservation services with the authority, says when the company first applied for the permit to build they were informed that problems regarding flood plain regulations could crop up

The authority's position he says, is that it told the company that it is having new mapping of the creek valley done this year and if these new maps show that there is no longer a flooding danger there then there is no problem.

But he says, this study will take about a year to be completed, and he's not sure if the mall owners are willing to accept that long a delay.

If there is still a flooding problem, says Smith, then further engineering studies may be done to see what solutions can be found, such as channelling the creek or building dykes.

The existing problem regarding stalling of the expansion is based on the statistics shown on 1964 flood plain maps These maps, which take Hurricane Hazel's flood lines as their base, show that the existing mall has a floor level which would be three feet under water during a serios flood in that area.

The company, he says, maintains that channelling of the creek already done has alleviated the danger of flooding, but this is not totally accurate

The next step for the company, he says, is to submit further engineering studies to the authority's engineers for comment and from there the application for the permit to build will go to the authority for a final decision

The fact that the main mall itself was allowed to be built in a flood plain area is no argument for permitting the expansion says Smith, since two wrongs don't make a right

Even if the company was willing to build a structure with a floor level above the flood line, he says, there would still be the problem of filling

To raise the ground to that height, he says, would mean tons of fill and this would seriously affect the channelling capacity of that flood plain area

On top of that, the authority does not allow filling in a flood plain

The Midtown Mall was built on a flood plane and plans to expand the shopping centre have been delayed due to the intervention of the Central Lake Ontario Conservation Authority. The authority was responsible several weeks ago for the decision by a soft drink bottler in the same area to move his plant out of town

Durham region is the prototype for others—Kruger

The Durham Region has more scope for the pioneer than any other region that has been created says John Druger

Kruger, as executive director of Metropolitan Toronto, is a recognized expert on regional government He also has strong ties with the new Durham Region, as a former Pickering Township councillor and director of the active West Rouge Ratepayers' Association.

The region is as yet unformed, but ripe for development, he says And the province has given the regional council all of the tools it needs to co-ordinate and initiate development

'Each of the regions created so far has been a separate experiment,' says Kruger "The fascinating thing about the Durham Region is that it goes the furthest toward one-tier system of all of them."

The Durham regional experiment, he says, may lead to a revision of the other regions, particularly Metro that is now 20 years old and needs some improvements.

Perhaps the most significant aspect of the Durham Region, says Kruger, is that planning is a totally one tier responsibility and the act, which assigns planning authority to the regional level has teeth in it

This is essential if the region is going to function he says, because the impacts on this area aren't duplicated in the regions to the north and west of Metro

This region will have to cope with impact of the new international airport which will definitely go ahead, and with the development of the existing new [illegible] in Pickering Community [illegible] Community

It will have to design utilities installation to serve the influx of people and industry into the area that has already begun.

John Kruger

It will have to maintain a greenbelt area in south Pickering, and area now under severe development pressures, a a buffer between the regionand Metro

It will have to make decisions about the large amount of rural and recreation land north of the Ridges

And in addition, he says it will have to learn to cooperate and co-ordinate its efforts with those of Metro and other regions around Toronto

There is talk of a regional transit authority to co-ordinate transportation systems between the regions, he says

A major concern of Kruger's for the Durham Region is the cost of police protection

The Niagara Region spends 50 percent of its annual budget on a regional police force

The Durham Region will have to determine what use it is going to make of the Ontario Provincial Police for the rural areas that [illegible] their own police forces, and how to relieve the impact on those taxpayers in the rural areas when it becomes necessary to eliminate the OPP and give the total responsibility to a regional police force

Some kind of super-regional body will be necessary to make the most effective use of all of the expertise available in all of the regions, the former Pickering Township councillor believes

Some way must be devised for the Durham Region, for example, to take advantage of the expertise in rapid transit developed in Metro, he says

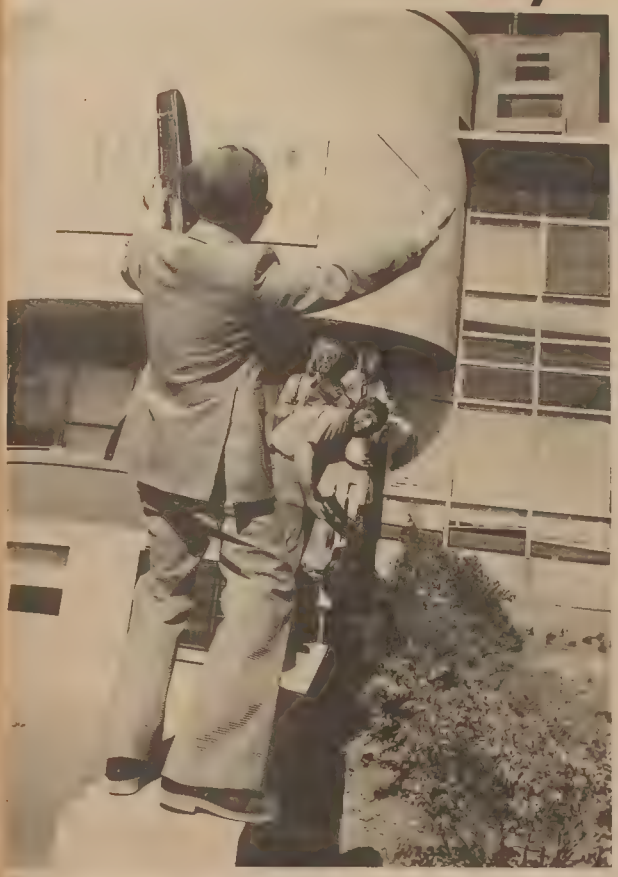
Former drunk tank may be home to symphony orchestra



As soon as they heard the news that the former Oshawa police department building might be turned into an arts centre, the This Week Chamber Orchestra and Leadbelly Blues Band converged on the building hoping to be the first group to get permission to practise there. That's Publisher Peter Brouwer directing the players in a rousing rendition of "The Lord Thomson Dirge".

Rock and roll may soon make the old police station come alive

Ald Jack Wiley, in his bid to get an arts centre for Oshawa, says council may agree to renovate the old McMillan Drive police station so various art groups and organizations can use it as a functional arts centre

Wiley has been seeking either one of two kinds of arts centre: a performing centre or a functional centre. A performing centre would be used to stage plays, recitals and the like. A functional arts centre would be used for rehearsals, storage, administrative space, a central ticket agency, meetings, work shops and rooms for crafts

Wiley has been working closely with the recreation department and the Oshawa and District Council for the Arts His committee has just recently received the questionnaires that were sent out to more than 50 city groups interested in an arts centre

"It's hard to make a summary," Wiley says Each group has its own needs and objectives and it was hard to pin down one direction. There was unanimity in one thing, all said a facility of some sort was absolutely necessary "

Rather than an expensive performing arts centre, Wiley says most groups want a functional facility to practise and meet in

"The police station offers these things," the young alderman says "The committee has been through it and we think it has great possibilities Of course, we'll have to look into how practical it would be to use it"

The building is owned by the city, and Wiley says it would be less expensive, as far as he knows, to renovate the building than to construct one somewhere else

"It would be more or less a stop-gap measure," he says "A performing centre won't be built for another two years, if council can be convinced"

A brief to city council on the matter is in its preparatory stages now, he says but it will be a few weeks before the committee's recommendations go before councillors

But, if city council gives the go-ahead, Wiley says he can't see why anyone who is interested wouldn't be allowed to use the facility for a very minimal fee—even rock groups who haven't got a good place to practise

In the beginning, Wiley was almost unsupported in his efforts to increase the cultural facilities available in the city. Now, he says, the idea of an arts centre is gaining popularity

"People are beginning to realize that it will only enhance cultural activities to have something like this," he says. "It may even prompt more community participation in the arts."

Because Wiley has been previously very active in sports, he says a lot of people have asked him why he is getting involved in such a "sissy thing" like establishing an arts centre

"I say if people are going to put in a lot of time on a play or recital for the pleasure of the rest of the citizens, why not make it as comfortable for them as possible," he says "Hell, I really enjoy going to a play. Just as sports contribute to the development of a community's maturity, so do the arts

The alderman says he is now optimistic that the idea of a city arts centre "is going some place"

He makes this analogy "A football team wouldn't want to practise in a hayfield "

Nine hundred students on a busman's holiday

By Jane Milne
Staff Writer

One of the most terrible fates a teenager could possibly imagine is taking math at summer school for six weeks

This is not however the case at Eastdale Collegiate where approximately 910 high school students are now preparing for their next school year

"The first year I taught summer school," says math teacher Gary McConnell, "I thought of the two hours a day I would be with people who had failed and didn't want to be there But surprisingly, it is a very nice atmosphere During the school year I don't get to spend that much time with students but at summer school I can "

The students range in grades from 9 to 13 and are from 23 schools throughout Ontario County and Courtice and Bowmanville.

"We have five different bus routes," says Fred Rhodes, principal of the summer school. "The buses bring the students here at 8:30 a.m. and pick them up again at 12:30 p.m."

There are several reasons why a student would choose to attend summer school, which is voluntary

"Obviously the reason why students come to summer school is to erase a failure or improve their background in a subject area so they can continue in it in the fall," he says

Rhodes explains that some schools have prerequisites and that for example, a student would have to take course B in order to take course C. These students are therefore at summer school to take course B

"There is a select group here also,"he says "They are grade 13 students who have a second chance to get their diploma."

The subject which the largest number of students have found trouble with is mathematics and even though Rhodes says it is a stumbling block for many high school students, math along with English is still necessary as a backbone subject

McConnell says the students seem to have difficulty in interpreting the notations in the math text books and actually knowing what is being asked of them

He also sees as another problem in math, the fact that by the time a student reaches high school, he already knows all the math he will need in everyday life and can't see any practical applicaiton of what he is learning unless he intends to go on to higher math in university

"As a math teacher there are two things I'm trying to do," he says "First of all, I have a responsibility to those who are going on to higher education in math or science, although they are not a majority. For the others, I try to teach a point of view, not just math, not just the facts, but the attitude that hard work brings results and that they can overcome a problem that they face."

The decision to come to summer school is up to the students since it is optional and is usually discussed with guidance people at the school of the student and with his or her parents.

"If the student's marks are down in English, math or science, the parents realize that these are core subject which the student has to have," says Rhodes

Teachers apply from all over the county to teach summer school and he says this year the response was very good with three times as many applications as there were positions available

The Grade 9 classes are always the largest at summer school and aside from the reason of failure Rhodes says this is because the 13, 14, and 15-year-olds are still not old enough to get jobs so they have the time to attend

Summer school lasts for six weeks, from July 3 to August 10 with exams held on the last two days in every subject Report cards are then sent out to the students about a week later

"I can't predict this year, but last year we had 86 per cent success," says Rhodes

He says success at summer school depends very much on attendence as well as marks

Both Rhodes and McConnell agree however, that students of today are more knowledgeable and with this have some degree of increased maturity

Kruger calls for co-operation

A strong interdependence and co-operation must develop between Metro and the regions encircling it, says Metro's executive director, John Kruger

A computerized information system linking the administration of the regions between Hamilton and Durham is essential because people don't recognize municipal boundaries, he says

Metro is now developing a sophisticated information retrieval system for social services people, whereby a social worker can receive via cathode ray tube all information available on anyone who has been a welfare recipient.

If this kind of sytem is introduced into the other regions, they can avoid being "ripped off" by people who attempt to collect welfare in more than one region, says Kruger

The same type of data bank will be essential for police work, he says

Big bucks are necessary says Kruger

The people of Durham Region are going to have to pay good money if they hope to attract high-quality candidates for elected positions

The mayors of the eight municipalities and the 22 other regional councillors will have to spend fulltime at regional and local council work, says John Kruger, a potential candidate for mayor of Pickering

These people will have to be well-compensated for their time and efforts in order to make up for their loss of normal income, he says

Kruger, executive director for Metro Toronto, is concerned about the councillors who will be elected to serve just their local municipalities and will have no regional duties

"What is left for them to do?" he asks, in view of the fact that the local councils have been left with very few major decisions to make and will basically play a housekeeping role within the regional framework

The regional councillor is going to be much better informed and more likely to be consulted by the public than a strictly local councillor, says Kruger

"So who's going to run for local councillor, except as a stepping stone to a position with the regional council?

Hillers move home games to Brooklin

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

In a surprise move, General Manager and Coach Ivan Davie of the Ajax Knob Hill Provincial Junior "A" hockey club has switched homes for the upcoming 1973-74 season

No longer will the Hillers play their home games out of the Ajax Arena They have now adopted the Brooklin Arena, which was rebuilt last winter, for their homes game site

This is only a temporary move according to Davie as the new Whitby Arena should be ready about mid-season with about 1,500 seats and the Hillers will then call this their new home

The provincial Junior "A" league will have a new member this season, Markham Seal-A-Wax, a strong Junior "B" team in the Metro League for years

Markham have a new building to play in and although the Provincial Junior "A" circuit had rejected an affiliation with the Major Junior "A" loop, Markham will still receive player talent from the Memorial Cup champions Toronto Marlboros

Other clubs in the league include North Bay Trappers, Downsview, Dixie Beehives, Weston Dodgers, North York Rangers, Aurora Tigers, Richmond Hill Rams, Wexford, Seneca Flyers and Toronto Nationals

League play will start on September 28 with the Hillers calling Thursday night their home games with the face-off times scheduled for 7·30 p.m

Last season the Hillers finished in sixth place ad lost out in the quarter finals against Richmond Hill Rams.

Despite the fact 20 players from the Brooklin-Whitby-Ajax area were drafted by Junior "A" clubs, Davies expects to field an outstanding hockey club as the majority of his skaters were playing their first year of Junior "A" hockey last semester.

Gone are the J.F.K. united consisting of Bernie Johnston, John Fielding and Rick Kranc. Fielding was runner-up in the scoring with 101 points including 50 goals.

He along with Johnson will be attending the Marlies camp while Kranc has an excellent chance of making the St. Catharines Black Hawks

Steve Stavro, who recently purchased part of the Toronto Toros of the Worlds Hockey Association, is again back as the team's sponsor. He will also serve as a director of the team based in Brooklin.

Art Desjardines has accepted the post of president, Norm Irwin is honorary president, and Morris Wooten, Dr. Ken Huggs and Ver Rowe, will be the other directors

Vice president is Vern McCarl, treasurer Norm Hancock, secretary Bob Greer, time keeper Bill Stannett and publicity Paul Gaudette

Other members of the executive are Ron McCarl, Al Heffering, Dave Godfrey, Doug Willey, John Fleming, Doug Underwood, Bob Taylor, and George Mowatt.

Davies expects to step down as coach of the club this season.

"It's just too difficult to operate both jobs," claims Davies.

Within the next two weeks Davies plans to announce a new coach and team manager for the club. Training camp will be opening up in just eight weeks.

The Ajax Knob Hillers (dark sweaters) have announced that they're moving their homebase to Brooklin next season. The other team seen here is from Weston.

Hawkeyes open their season on Friday

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

Oshawa Hawkeyes open up the Ontario Junior Football conference Friday night with the home opener of the season against the highly touted Oakville Colts

Game time is 8 p.m. at Civic Fields and the Hawkeyes will be out to improve on the clubs 7-7 win-loss record in its rookie campaign

Rookie mentor Bill McTeer will be operating a wishbone offence against the Colts which proved successful in workouts. However the team's weak point seems to be on defence

Last Friday night, Hawkeyes were dumped 35-12 by the Lakeshore Bears in a pre-season game and the defence looked poor

All week long the Hawkeyes coaching staff have been working on this point Hawkeyes are operating a zone defence but inexperience has been the downfall as the players aren't picking up a loose man as on occassion two defenders have been taking the same offensive player thus leaving the club open for passes with players in the clear

It is expected that sophomore quarterback Paul Nelson will be getting the starting assignment at the pivot slot with Jim McHugh and Tom Buchanan serving as backup men

Junior B hockey dies

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

The announcement by Ivan Davie that the Ajax Knob Hillers will be moving their home games to Brooklin this winter, means the end of Junior "B" hockey in Whitby

The CTC Tiremen under coach Bill Berwick and General Manager Eddie Crouch failed to make the play-offs in this rookie season but showed plenty of promise for this season with lots of player talent

Crouch, the former president of the Brooklin Whitby Minor Hockey Association who operated the Junior "B" club felt that Junior hockey could survive in Whitby but was disappointed that he couldn't reach an agreement with Davie over the operating rights of such a club

Davie holds the Junior club franchise for Whitby

Last year the Tiremen were the affiliate club with Ajax Hillers With the loss of Whitby and Markham who will be operating a team in Provincial Junior "A" league, it means the Metro loop is now down to four clubs Pickering Panthers, Oshawa Legionaires Brampton and Peterboro Lions

Tyke Tourney

The second annual invitational tyke tournament of the Ajax Lacrosse Association will be held July 28 and 29 at the Ajax arena, beginning 8 a.m. on Saturday

There will be 16 teams involved

Oshawa juniors

Oshawa Juniors went for 11 innings before dropping a 5-4 decision to Toronto Queensway on Sunday

Tony's get three all—star players

Oshawa Tony's have placed three players on the Ontario Fastball League west division all-star club who will be playing the East division selects this Saturday in London

Team manager Dick Hames of the London Dukes has added pitcher Barry Timbers who owns a 10-6 win lost record and a sparkling ERA of .086

Other members of the Western all-stars are catcher Jim Brown of London, pitcher Peter Landers and second baseman Marty Twyman of Toronto, Bill Shaddick of London at third base, Bill Birg of St. Catharines as shortstop and Rick McCaw of London in centre field

To-night Tony's play a double-header in Kitchener against the V's, have another road game in Welland on Sunday meeting the Dyke Jewellers club and the next home attraction is next Tuesday night

Lacrosse booms in the west where they wonder what happened

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

Back from holidays after spending two weeks on the West Coast and naturally we had to take in some sporting events

On the coast in the lacrosse circles, the question was tired at us: "What has happened to the Gaels?"

Ever since Jim Bishop left, the Gaels just haven't been the same. This year was the lowest ebb with the Gaels finishing the season Monday night and missing the play-offs for the first time in the team's 10 year history

Fans in Vancouver and Victoria are just amazed at the Gaels down fall and being from Oshawa, we tried quickly to change the subject However it didn't work

Those Victoria Shamrock and New Westminster Salmonbellies supporters remember those seven years when the Gaels took the Canadian laurels and the Minto Cup away from them.

They have never forgotten but are completely surprised about the Oshawa downfall

Another bitter pill was the folding of the Brooklin Redmen who like the Gaels had some real battles with those Western clubs

As for lacrosse in the West, it looks better than ever with good crowds in attendance for the games We hardly think that an eastern club will be beating the powerful Richmond BC club this season.

An ex-Gael superstar, Gaylord Powless, is now playing in Western Canada and he's just as great as ever!

He picked up five goals and three assists leading his club to a victory over the Brantford Warriors who are supposed to be the best in the east

It looks as if the west has regained its pride and victory ability to cope with the Eastern clubs and we're predicting a Western sweep in both the Minto and Mann Cup next September

While out west, we spent some time in Calgary where semi-pro baseball is really booming. Good crowds of more than 1,000 are in attendance for teams in the Alberta loop which has six clubs

Two each from Calgary and Edmonton, and teams from Lethbridge and Red Deer

Former New York Met reliever Ron Taylor is the playing manager of one of the clubs and he asked us to remember him to all his fans in Oshawa

He formerly played in the Leaside Junior ball loop and his dad Wes Taylor for years was a big backer of ball in Toronto and for a couple of years was president of the LABA

Wildlife last chance

By Mary Margaret Allen

"And he huffed and he puffed and he blew the house down."

Sound familiar? This line has been terrorizing The Three Little Pigs for years. Through this book and others similar to it, animals such as the wolf have been given stereotyped characters and habits.

If you keep calling a wolf cruel, sooner or later someone will start to believe you This has led to the destruction and almost extinction of a completely necessary animal that has not been able to live up to his supposed-nasty reputation.

But this is not unusual; man has managed to assign characters to the 'lower' animals for centuries. When was the last time you said that a person was "as sly as a fox," or "as dirty as a pig"?

We constantly use such phrases for description and most of them are totally unwarranted. It's the little things that make the most damage.

One cause of the problem is the literature that is published for children When they are constantly exposed to stories like 'Little Red Riding Hood' or 'Peter and the Wolf' they naturally believe the image of the wolf or any other animal presented to them

Then, when approaching adulthood, since no one has set them straight, their minds wander back to the books and pictures of wolves drooling, teeth bared waiting to eat small children

They immediately arm themselves in supposed defence to kill every living beast that moves in the forest whose image is one of fearfullness and evil

To be honest, children's books are not the only culprits, greed and bloodlust (more commonly known as sport) have caused more deaths

Is it so much fun to kill? Is it amusing to see some dying starving racoon in a trap struggling to chew off his leg in order to get free?

It seems to me that if man is so civilized he should be able to amuse himself by other means than needless slaughter

I can understand the need for killing in the case of the early settlers--they used the carcasses for food and clothing and very seldom wasted any part This unfortunately was true only for the early pioneers

As they progressed they naturally became more wasteful

When the railway came to be built across the territory of the bison, these huge animals fell fast to the numerous guns of the white man

They were seldom used for the purpose of food and were more often left to rot much to the sorrow of the Indians who depended on them for most of their supplies

More often than not, the mighty sportsmen who murdered these defenceless beasts would take just the head as do many of todays' hunters with the moose or deer

I was very happy when the synthetic fake furs came out; I had hoped this would mean the end of real fur coats--but it didn't'

Women and men too still use fur coats as a status symbol. What status can there be in wearing the skin of a dead animal?

What pride can there be in knowing the coat you are wearing is from an animal who is just about extinct? Since people will be human, other animals soon find themselves on the list of the endangered species

With the onset of modern civilization as we know it man decided to do something to save the wild creatures; of course, this is after the dodo bird and passenger pigeon became extinct and after the bison or buffalo was seriously threatened

Also on the list of the endangered species we could list the following: Trumpeter swan, Arctic fox, polar bear, whale, lynx, whooping crane, etc...etc. etc

Still, man has not accomplished much. He has talked a great deal as he always does; but action is the only point he seems to avoid

I suppose I shouldn't be too harsh; the government is starting to take some action now, but could it be too late?

Research teams across the country are working hard at trying to decide as to how the animals can be saved from their fate Bounties are gradually being removed as we finally learn the wrong that has been done by them

The government has provided us with hunting seasons for specific species and even will ban the hunting of a certain animal if the population for that year is too low

The problem is not as of yet ended and I sincerely doubt that it ever will be Poachers will always be there to murder, never heeding the rules but there to hunt, to find and to destroy.

I wonder how it felt to be the boy who killed the last sighted wild passenger pigeon?

JUST A FEW FACTS

Around 1813, nearly 40 per cent of the bird population in North America consisted of the passenger pigeon. The last authenticated sighting of a wild pigeon was by a young boy who shot it on March 24, 1900.

The last passenger pigeon in captivity died at the Cincinnatie Zoological Gardens in the year 1914

Hunters, hand in your guns

By Mary Margaret Allen

It has been said by many astrologers that Virgos tend to be sarcastic, overcritical and possess a sharp biting tongue

Since I have been perfectly described, I will take it from here. Marv the Mouth strikes again! No one is free from the harsh opinions of this unusual mind

Being an animal lover, I have decided to attack those men who are constantly destroying harmless and helpless lives; yes, those mighty hunters

Before I have my typewriter taken from me, I would like to say that even I am not free from such a title.

I have been the exterminator of a plentiful animal that enjoys eating my carrots as much as I do--the ground hog

In defence of myself though, I will tell you that it is done because it has to be, not for pleasure Anyone who knows me understands that I would make these wee beasties into pets if they were not so destructive

Naturally I refuse to jump on someone who kills out of need or for reasons of survival, but what I wish to show you are the examples of ruthless, underhanded, sneaky, cowardly murder.

Give a man a gun and in more cases than not you have created an uncontrollable monster Frankenstien had a bigger heart.

A gun is an advantage over any animal; you don't use too many deer walking around with similar weapons If they did, there would be a noticeable decline in the number of hunters

Since man is the least naturally protected animal (no claws, etc.) it's obvious that he requires some tool to make himself equal to the others

In my opinion, the knife would be the best choice--for equality. Man doesn't like equality; he has a paranoiac condition that causes him to wish for superiority

So it isn't enough to have a gun; to reinforce his unstable position he brings along some other 'tool' which gives the hunter an unfair advantage

Man's nose is practically worthless. He smells only those very prominent odors. Because of this he has taken on a 'friend' to help him track down the wild beasts. Enter the dog

These dogs are trained to chase anything from bear to deer to rabbit. Once this maniac is on the trail, the victim runs until, taken by complete exhaustion he drops (sometimes dead) in his tracks

The making his grand appearance the mighty hunter shoots the animal when it is down. This is a common trait of man--get the other fellow at a disadvantage and shoot him in the back

It is not bad enought to use dogs but to make matters worse these canine creatures are often left in the woods and eventually turn wild. It is them who run down and kill for no reason and then the blame is placed on the innocent wolf

Another point against hunters is the way they make up for the speed they lack. Employing snowmobiles and planes is not very amusing They perform just the same task that a dog would but this is far more serious

Up in the northern regions of Canada and Alaska during the months of winter, it is common tosee two or three men in a plane hunting

There is a standard technique used by all planekillers. First, sight the victim and lower the altitude of the plane. The run over top of the animal to make it sufficiently terrified so that it will run

Continue this procedure several times and make sure to block all exits. You don't want to lose him, do you? If he seems to be falling down a lot you had better shoot him before he has a heart attack from fear. Now doesn't that sound like fun!

It gives unmitigated proof that man is a big fat coward. He hasn't the nerve to face the other animals by himself, without weapons

The world would be better off without hunters. If you think about it, the only one who has spoiled the balance of nature is man Some people think the world would manage far better with him on some other planet

This is a bit drastic; I think that if we take care of the animals that would suffice. Remeber man is an animal too

Beginnings

By Valerie Bothwell

Our company, Y.E.S. (Youth Enterprises Summer), is seeking to present to the youth of the community and the young at heart selected articles in our five consecutive pages from July 25 to August 24 on such crucial concerns as: conservation, the arts, social concern issues and educational issues

It is part of the program O.Y.S.E., Ontario Youth Summer Enterprises, sponsored by the Ontario Government and co-ordinated by Junior Achievement. We are involved in a learning experience.

It is education by doing, accompanied with the ups and downs of on-the-job training. We are all excited about the opportunity and hopefully prepared financially and psychologically for the probable pitfalls.

The situation I am about to describe is somewhat ridiculous and merely the progeny of a fantasy.

If the company was surrounded by several large wall-to-wall mirrors, the mirrors would reflect the light forming definite set images of the company.

That is exactly the way however, that one sitting down to write about the company thinks. It is the recollection of different set images in various situations.

In essence that is what the rest of my editorial is composed of.

Each is a unique, individual with professed ideals, values, and aspirations.

Of the 14 members that comprise the company, eight have definite plans for their awakening lives. The range is diverse, involving many areas such as the biological sciences, social sciences and business-oriented careers.

Most possess active and imaginitive minds, each having their own place in the human race. All are people giving and taking in our society, some even of the majority age.

The five executive officers who compose the management team have responsibilities varying from secretarial functions to managing the company operations.

All of the officers are directly reportable to the program manager. At the present time all of them have a great deal of learning to do in the area of using their authority in such a way that it benefits the company directly as well as indirectly.

Responsibility is an awesome weight that can be borne wisely or unwisely. It is something that comes of trial, error and practice. It is not learned from a textbook. All of the executive are taking their first wobbly steps at beginning the task.

The various staff writers, salesmen and salesladies, form the basis of the company. They are the backbone and initial character.

The staff writers began somewhat hesitantly, unsure of their style, and conscious of the responsibility to produce work of high quality and integrity

The writing was not the same as assigned composition essays in school. There were necessary ploys that needed to be exercised early in the story

Grammar and spelling played more of a role than it seemed when the two were forced on you in a small dark cubicle called a classroom; they are sudden ly essential.

Grammar and spelling are part of the hammer driving home the unified idea, the nail

The salemen excitedly prepared advertisements and learned campaign strategy for their first day of selling. The establishment of friendly communication between seller and prospective buyer was rudimentary.

Within a time lapse of three days of the second week all were working hard. With the sale of the first advertisement space, smiling faces were seen and enthusiastic ideas for future advertisements were heard. Even the program manager breathed a sigh of relief.

In the editorial department enthusiasm ran high. More and more articles were submitted for editing. Meetings regarding the next week's topics and research material were already being held. The staff writers were ready to go and eagerness took hold of everyone.

We did, however, have our downfalls. We lost a few advertisements and stories had to be scrapped. Nevertheless the company was not ashamed, on the contrary we were generally pleased with our progress. In fact these downfalls did have some positive effects.

It showed the company's spirit was an industrious one and that constructive lessons had been learned. Also it established the fact that all of the company were putting forth effort. Lastly and perhaps most important of all it reinforced our promise to the public of high quality.

We hope you, the citizens of Oshawa and surrounding areas, will derive some thoughts on youth from reading our page which we have diligently prepared for you.

We promise you interesting articles and points of view from our five consecutive productions.

Cowsill and Hann "built" a subdivision last Tuesday

By Garnet Cowsill
Staff Writer

Bob Hann and I built a subdivision last Tuesday

Hann, a well-known local developer, says he was "amazed" at the outcome

When we were finished going through the red tape of rezoning, subdividing and amending the city's official plan to suit our needs, we found that needless government bureaucracy had boosted the price of a semi-detached home by $5,000.

We decided to theoretically build a medium-sized subdivision using what Hann terms "realistic figures". We "bought" 12 acres of land at about the average going price today of $75,000 an acre to subdivide into 50 semi-detached lots

We went to a bank, and sure enough, our credit was good. We got a $900,000 mortgage to buy the land at an interest rate of 9 per cent We added another one per cent onto our annual carrying charges for taxes, making our total buying cost $90,000 a year

Now, according to the city's draft development procedure guide it should take less than a year to complete rezoning and subdivision procedures. 256 days to be exact

That's if everything goes right

But, it never does

If they (city hall) could get plans approved according to their schedule, I'd be very happy," Hann says "I don't think there would be any argument whatsoever from developers."

If we could get a subdivision plan approval in the year the planning and development department says we could, the added cost of the subdivision would be one year's carrying charges of $90,000 and the $40,000 interest we would have to pay to borrow servicing money. Servicing costs about $8,000 per lot

If you divide the 50 lots into those figures combined, a year of good, quick government bureaucracy would cost the consumer or homebuyer a mere $2,600 per lot

But, of course, Hann and I ran into those everyday problems that we developers run into. Civil servants tabled our file on us when they weren't supposed to And it took one clerk up in Toronto six weeks to type a rezoning approval for us—you know, the average everyday problems that Hann has run into before

And so it took 2-½ years instead of the one, to get our subdivision registered and get a building permit Hann says that's the usual time if there aren't too many complications

Well, of course, we weren't going to pay for all the money we had spent while waiting for the red tape to untangle Whatever it cost us would be added onto the cost of the lots, and hence the actual home package

And, this is how we figured it If it took 2-½ years to get approval, it would take an additional six months to sell before we would begin making any money, so that means there would be three years interest on our capital costs

We added our capital costs to the interest on the money we borrowed for servicing, plus various city levies and the cost to financing while we were negotiating the sale, and that worked out to close to $400 000

We then subtracted from the $400 00 the cost of one year of bureaucracy, which is all the planning department says it needs, and found that additional bureaucracy had cost us $270,000, which averages out to a little more than $5 000 a lot

If it took three years then, instead of only the one to deliver the lots, the homebuyer ends up paying an additional $7,500 for his home package instead of that $2,500

"I'm amazed," Hann said after we were finished figuring it all out. "I'm really amazed I've never really worked it out this way before, per lot I mean. I would have said it would have cost about an extra $2,500. I didn't think it would cost that much "

Perhaps, if it wasn't for all that bureaucracy, more of us could afford to buy a home nowadays

Remember, the homebuyer doesn't pay for just the additional $5,000, he also pays the 9-½ per cent mortgage interest rate to get that money. As builder Gerry Armstrong said to civic officials at a builders meeting recently: "And the homebuyer pays for 40 years

Staff Writer Garnet Cowsill took a break from cutting out paper dolls in order to play with blocks during an interview with developer Bob Hann.

Limiting the hold up would save homebuyer thousands

Timed bureaucracy is what Bob Hann advocates to speed up subdivision plan approvals and lower the cost of housing

In another articles, it was shown that waiting for government bodies and agencies to approve a 50-lot semi-detached subdivision increased the cost of the home package by $7,500

There are approximately 90 such government bodies and agencies that a subdivision plan must go through before it is approved by the necessary municipal, provincial and federal authorities

Hann, a local developer, says to speed up the plan approval process and lower housing costs, there must be some sort of direction or legislation at all three levels giving each body to a specified amount of time to comment.

"Someone has got to say to each department involved that it has got to have its comments on the plan in by x-number of days," he says. "All the bodies are important, but they should be given a time limit. I don't think we could ever go back to the days when we were without a conservation authority, or any of the agencies that approve the plan "

The city's planning and development department's draft development procedure guide says it should take only 256 working days approve a subdivision plan. But most developers complain that it takes closer to three years, and in the meantime, they are spending vast amounts of money which is passed onto the consumers, renters and homebuyers, and recovered from them.

Hann maintains that if a department approving its part of the plan can't make a decision because of complications, then there should be an exception of the time period

"I think the developer would realize that if there were reasonable conditions for granting a time extension, then it wouldn't really be undue bureaucracy," he say "I think they'd says: 'Fine, that's understandable' "

Developers, however, are not the only ones to recognize undue bureaucracy

"Bureaucracy is excessive," says Peter Hammer, city planning director. "It's pushing up the cost of housing because land is held out of development for longer than necessary while developers are continuing to pay interest "

Unlike Hann, Hammer maintains that the cost increase due to government red tape "overall...is probably minor "

Mayor Jim Potticary also admits that there is a "slow process for subdivision approvals" within the government agencies. He sees regional government as an answer to the problem

"I hope under regional government we can set up the process so that fewer and fewer people are handling the plan," Potticary says. "I also hope that the final plan approval will be a final decision of the region (and not the province) "

Hammer agrees and says the plans should not have to go to the province

"Plan approvals should be relegated to local and regional authorities," Hammer says. "I think it is the intention of the province to decentralize this—it has to be decentralized. There are competent people at the local levels and the province recognizes this."

Hann, however, is not overly-optimistic that the matter would be solved if plan approval authority was put at the local and regional level

"I don't really know if the region will have that right," he says. "I think the staff is qualified enough as far as engineering qualifications go, but I still don't think they would look at the future; look at developments as building new communities for new people They'd just think of the present homeowner and how developments hurt them."

Another way of speeding up the approval process, at least at the planning board stage, is to get the expertise of the development industry as part of the board's input, he says

"They could get retired developers to sit on the board," he says. "I wouldn't want them to vote. They should be used strictly for their expertise and be able to offer their comments."

Hann says he has no complaints about the planning board and he considers it an essential part of the planning process

"As long as they are open-minded and you are fairly heard by them and then turned down on some project, I think you go away satisfied," he says "But when they've already made up their minds before you get there, it's frustrating."

Paver gives his side of the story

Pavers have problems too

As a follow-up to one of last week's Contacts in which Oshawa resident Art Rutter complained that Oshawa Quality Construction had paved his driveway but had caused drainage problems, John Maracle, the company representative who contracted with Rutter, gave us his side of the story

Maracle met with a reporter and photographer at Rutter's house and put the hose to the driveway to show us the drainage. The water went off the driveway onto the sidewalk, and Maracle says pavers are not allowed to tamper with city property

The sidewalk, he says, is on a slope and naturally the water will drain according to that slope

Rutter also complained that the area paved was less than what the contract called for

Maracle says the contract calls for 690 square feet to be paved. Only 645 square feet were paved, he says, because Rutter didn't want one section of the driveway covered. He also says the company tore out some concrete near the sidewalk and paved that. It cost an additional $30, he says, but because it wasn't stipulated in the contract he doesn't expect to get paid for it

"It's not necessary to do anything more to the driveway," Maracle says. "Other pavers have looked at it and they say it's a good job. There's a 100 per cent guarantee on the work for three years anyway "

Maracle also says the company has been operating for two years, and this is the first complaint it has had

Jim Skentzos, owner of the Ranch Steak House and Tavern in Ajax, offers good service and tasty food says Staff Writer Jane Milne, with the result that he is already planning to expand his premises.

Ranch Steak House has a professional touch

By Jane Milne
Staff Writer

With so few really good restaurants available to residents of the Durham Region, the Ranch Steak House and Tavern in Ajax is a very pleasant surprise

An unassuming building, hidden behind the shops of the Ajax Plaza on Commercial Avenue Ranch offers its patrons a quiet, relaxed atmosphere in a dimly-lit Grecian dining room

The most impressive part of the menu is the wine list which offers varieties of French, Greek, Italian, South African and German wines as well as imported and domestic champagnes and liqueurs at surprisingly reasonable prices.

Appetizers of kosher dills and stuffed olives are brought to each table with such delicacies as marinated Bismark herring, smoked salmon and a Greek salad plate

A separate luncheon menu includes light meals of sandwiches, soup of the day and an excellent beef stroganoff Entrees of top sirloin centre cut, shish kebab of lamb and South African lobster tails to name only a few selections, are all served with salad, choice of dressing and potato, juice or soup and garlic bread

The best part of our meal at Ranch last week, aside from finding the well-done steak ordered to be still tender and juicy, was the service which was efficient yet unrushed.

The other diners in the room seemed as content as we to leisurely enjoy their meal while pampered by an obviously professional staff of restaurateurs

From the magnum of wine, poured expertly for the gentleman to sample to the over-sized brandy snifter of after-dinner mints, the rich red old world decor made it difficult to realize we were still in North America much less Ajax - a town that can justly boast of a fine restaurant

Owner of the two year-old steak house, Jim Skentzos, says he plans expansion upstairs and to the rear of the building to accommodate his business which has understandably grown considerably in the past months

Taking your hotel room with you

Along with the summer fun of camping and boating comes the tricky business of pulling a trailer

When it comes to towing, even the most experienced car driver may find himself in an awkward, or even hazardous situation

Six special skills are required to pull a trailer safely and efficiently

A driver must realize that he must change his driving habits if he's going to tow a trailer At all times, he has to be aware that the trailer is there and make allowances for it

The first rule, according to the Ontario Motor League, is to get underway slowly and smoothly when pulling a trailer Make sure there is extra time and room before moving into traffic and glance frequently in the rear view mirror to check the trailer's actions and oncoming traffic

Turning a corner with a trailer requires new techniques, since trailer wheels will not follow the exact path of the car's rear wheels but will cut in closer to the inside of the curve

In making a right turn with a trailer, the driver should advance a bit further into the intersection than normal before starting his turn and then turn sharply, bringing the car back toward the curb

The towed unit reduces acceleration capability of the car and more distance must be allowed in order to pass and return to the proper lane. Avoid sudden swerves that can make the trailer hard to handle

Pull off

Since a car with a trailer-in-tow moves more slowly than many other vehicles on the highway, the driver must be attentive to vehicles wishing to pass. On a two-lane road, drivers should try to avoid getting nervous if traffic piles up behind them and should look for a convenient and safe spot to pull off the road to let the traffic pass

The trailer-traveller should be forewarned of the effect of a large truck or bus passing. In this event, the trailer tends to move to the right To counter-act this situation, the driver should make some slight steering corrections and avoid braking

Just as extra time and caution are required when starting up, slowing and stopping require extra care as a result of the added weight of the trailer

The trailer operator should maintain greater distance between himself and cars ahead and should brake more gently than necessary with a car alone

To avoid problems, the driver should maintain an easy speed that will minimize the need for emergency slow-downs and stops He should make certain, before taking the trailer out on the road, that the trailer's brakes are adjusted to the load

Difficult skill

The most difficult special skill required to tow a trailer is backing up. The essential point to remember is that the trailer will back in a direction opposite to the way the car's wheels are turned

The Ontario Motor League recommends plenty of practice in backing on a flat open space before the driver attempts to do it in traffic

Turning the steering wheel too much or holding it in the turned position too long may cause the trailer and car to jack-knife when backing As a result, a series of short slight turns is recommended

In all driving with a trailer, a major asset is an outside right-hand mirror

It is against the law to draw more than one vehicle behind a car

Monday is Father's Night at Mother's
When a father can feed his family for as little as $2.49
Every Monday evening from 4 'till 9 p.m., it's Father's Night at Mother's. When every father can afford to treat his family to their favorite pizza at their favorite place.
For just $2.49, Mother will prepare a perfect eight slice pizza. Then cover it with your choice of three items from Mother's menu. And, for the same $2.49 Mother will include a big, frosty jug of coke, gingerale, root beer, or orange.
If your family is famished or if you've invited along a few friends, then order two of Mother's Monday night specials and spend less than five dollars
Monday, Father's Night at Mother's is night when a dad can feed his family more, for less

Great escaper talks over old times with former POW in Whitby

By Jane Milne
Staff Writer

Daring deeds and movie stars came together in fascinating conversation recently at the Whitby home of Newton Turner

Two ex-prisoners of war – Turner, a navigator shot down over Crete in the early days of the Second World War, and his war-time friend, Wally Floody – reminisced about the years they spent in German P.O.W. camps, one of which was Stalag Luft III, famour as the camp of "The Great Escape."

Shot down over France in October of 1941, Floody spent almost four years, until June of 1945, in prison camp so when the author of "The Great Escape", Paul Brickhill was unable to assist producer John Sturgess in the making of the filmed version, he named Floody to take his place as the best man for the job of technical adviser

"I had worked on this idea of building a tunnel and was in charge of tunnelling," says Floody. "The film though, as it says in the credits, was a fictionalized account of an actual event"

He explains that although the producer was very thorough in his research, and did everything he possibly could to follow Floody's advice, it was difficult to be too exact since there were more than 500 men involved in the actual escape

"Two actors portrayed me," he says, "Charles Bronson and John Leighton The only exception in the film of a true-to-life portrayal was the guy called Big X, played by Richard Attenborough who personally studied and researched the character."

Wally Floody (centre) was technical adviser for the movie The Great Escape, and little wonder since the Scarborough resident was the main force behind building an escape tunnel in a German POW camp during the Second World War. Floody is seen above talking to two of the actors during the filming. That's James Coburn on the right.

"John Sturgess wasn't making a documentary," says Floody. "He was making a movie for money so he used things that happened in other camps as well as using scenes like Steve McQueen's motorcycle chase which would bring excitement to the average person."

Remembering the time he actually spent in the camp during the war, he says there was little maltreatment of the prisoners by the Germans except for shortages of food and fuel at times

"Aside from survival - eating and sleeping, we fought boredom, which the planning and digging of the tunnels helped."

"During the planning of the escape we made maps and clothes which involved a tremendous amount of team work," he says. "All were given chores and when something was going on, someone would lift the lid of the garbage can for example, to signal. We knew where every guard of the camp was at all times which was important to know when getting rid of the sand"

The men were also always suspicious and on guard against any "new" prisoners brought in for fear they were a plant

"We interrogated every new prisoner," says Floody. "If he knew someone in the camp it was best but if he couldn't verify where he had been or who he knew or knew him, we told the Germans they had better take him out or he'd be dead tomorrow."

The escape plans were so carefully made and the activities surrounding them so guarded, that Floody says many prisoners who had been interned at the camp didn't know anything about the escape plans

As for the success of the Great Escape, Floody has mixed feelings

"More than 500 men worked on the escape over a period of almost four years," he says "Seventy-six people got out of which 50 were murdered by the Gestapo In terms of friendship lost it was not very successful Only three got back to Allied countries"

"In terms of what we were supposed to do, in terms of harassment of the Germans, the escape was very successful," says Floody "It was the first time during the war that every uniformed German was called back from leave Every train was stopped and radio broadcasts were made every 15 minutes

He says that Hitler panicked and thought the British and Americans would drop brigades into Germany following the escape using the P.O.W.'s as support troops

After the filming of the movie in Munich where he told the filmmakers how the prisoners, the camp itself and the guards should look, Floody and his ex-prisoner of war friends (The Ex-Air Force Prisoner of War Association) all went to the Toronto premier of "The Great Escape" in July of 1963

"We all thought it was great," he says

One part of the film however, which he says was different from what really happened, was the July 4th celebration by the Americans in the camp who were depicted as making whiskey from potatos

Actually, the whiskey was made from raisins and prunes and in the film it only showed three Americans. There were really about 300," he says.

'I remember on that day I had three tunnels operating and proceeded to get into the sauce about four in the afternoon," says Floody "I was sitting in the trap, (the entrance to the tunnel) everyone was drunk, when someone came in and said somebody was at the bottom of the fire pool, passed out drunk We pulled him out and he was alright.'

"This guy we pulled out said, 'I want you to see something' He had put red jam on his hands and said he could walk on water Well, you can guess what happened but to this day he says he took two steps before his faith ran out."

In Stalag Luft III, there were P.O.W.'s from 17 different countries who Floody and Turner say shared a unique experience

"It's really something," says Floody "If I moved to any of a number of places throughout the world, I would have a built in group of friends.

Close friends since the war, Floody and Turner are members of the P.O.W. association and flew with several other members to England last March for the memorial service for Larry Slattery, the first "kriegie" (P.O.W.) of the war

"We have a very warm feeling for each other because when in a prison camp you're at the bottom of the barrel," says Floody "There's no where to go but up. We had a fatalistic attitude that nothing that bad could happen We lived for today because we could die tomorrow - so have another drink'

Says cookbook author

Informality is the name of the barbecue game

A barbecue party can be fun, if you start by being informal, says Mary Lisko, and Oshawa resident and author of a locally published cookbook

To begin with, she says the cost of food is increasing and it could be very expensive if you had to buy 15 steaks to feed your guests The best thing to do, she says, is begin to be informal right at the start by telling your guests that it would help if they brought the salads, or appetizers, or whatever

"Good organization is important," Mrs Lisko says "Decide what is to be on the menu and then delegate who should bring what. Divide the cost and assign what you think people are good at making."

If you plan to be drinking during the party, the best liquor is wine. She says it is a lot easier on the host than mixing drinks and being bothered with ice and various liquors. A bottle per person creates a nice, friendly atmosphere, she says. Economically, it helps if your guests bring their own choice of wine

A roast beef, she says, seems to be the best meat for a barbecue, especially if you are inviting more than three couples

Two six-pound shoulder, or rolled rib roasts will easily feed eight couples and takes about three hours to prepare

"Bring the roast to room temperature,' she says "That is of course important with all meats whether you're babrecuing or cooking indoors. When the meat is ready to be cooked, dry it off with paper towels so that it is not stewing in its own juices, but dry roasting.'

Never make your guests wait too long for their meal. If you know the meat will take three hours to cook, invite your guests to come about the midway mark, she says, so they can begin to mingle. Never supply enough chairs for your guests, she adivses That way they move around and meet other people at the party quickly

Try to discourage your guests from sitting too near the barbecue. Give yourself lots of room to cook and make sure everything you will need is outside of the house so you won't have to make unnecessary steps fnto the kitchen time and again

Don't make too many extras to go along with the main course. The meat is the most important ingredient in a barbecue, and extras tend to subtract from the taste of the meat Your guests want to be able to enjoy that barbecued flavor, she says

To make sure your guests are comfortable, plan to start the party at twilight so it is not so hot Make sure there are bug repellents available for your guests She recommends the burning mosquito coils

Don't be too structured Paper plates and a buffet-style dinner instead of silver service and pre-arranged seating plans add to the informality and enjoyment of your guests Barring weather conditions plan to eat outside, she says; that's part of the fun

Individual desserts and plenty of coffee afterwards is recommended

If you are a guest, Mrs Lisko says you should try to be considerate to your host's neighbors and not create too much noise, "or you can expect unexpected guests, like the police."

Wally Floody (foreground) and Newton Turner of Whitby spent the better part of last Saturday reminiscing about life in a German prisoner-of-war camp during the Second World War. They were interviewed by Staff Writer Jane Milne, whose father was also a POW.

This is how the nurses at the Oshawa General Hospital looked in 1910, one year before the hospital began training nurses. This year's graduating class, the last to receive instruction at the hospital, closes out an interesting history. From now on, student nurses will receive their training at community colleges.

End of an era as student nurses prepare to attend Durham College

by jane milne

The wards of Oshawa General Hospital will no longer be the classroom for student nurses as of this Friday when the class of '73 finalizes 60 years of nursing education at the hospital

Beginning Sept 1, 1973 student nurses throughout Ontario will earn their diplomas at community colleges instead of hospitals and so the move of the Oshawa School of Nursing from the hospital to Durham College

The move to general education is not as radical as one might think," says Muriel Ward, who will become head of the department of nursing at Durham in September

"In 1860, Florence Nightingale established the first organized training school for nurses says Miss Ward She had both theory and clinical application in the program with doctors giving lectures for approximately 36 hours to the lady practitioners who were expected to keep progress diaries which helped them to relate theory to nursing practice"

When schools of nursing were established in North America, Miss Ward says there was an attempt to follow this pattern set by Miss Nightingale in England but due to financial problems it was not possible

Rather than for go the establishment of the schools the committees involved decided that the student nurses would be responsible for a great number of lesser duties such as housekeeping in the wards where they were to obtain their practices

Following the acceptance of nurses doing non-nursing duties the profession has struggled to define nursing and insure that students spend their time learning nursing rather than doing other kinds of work," says Miss Ward

She says the stuggle to improve the standards of both the preparation of nurses and the quality of care provided for the public has continued on the part of the profession up until the present when now student nurses will finally be prepared through the general educational system

Shortly after the conclusion of World War II the Registered Nurses Association of Ontario gave leadership in the establishment of the demonstration school of nursing, the Metropolitan School of Nursing Hospital in Windsor Ontario she says Financed by the Canadian Red Cross Association for a period of five years, this school proved that nurses could be prepared in less than three years providing the school had control of students time

The conclusion of the study to evaluate this project The Lord Report of 1962 was that nursing preparation must be paid for in money rather than work

Two problems then faced the profession One was to establish a program in a shorter length of time and second to get financial backing for them

It was not until 1960 however that a diploma program was established based on the criteria of the report of a special working party of the RNAO in 1957 which ensured autonomy of the administration of the institution

This was the Nightingale School of Nursing in Toronto

"When financial support was not forthcoming says Miss Ward "a compromise was made and the two plus one concept in diploma preparation was born This two plus one pattern allowed for two years of education by controlled preparation plus one year of nuring internship which was a clinical practice The intern year was the compromise It was necessary to have this in order to meet the legislation of that time which stated that the nurses training period must be 1 095 days"

Miss Ward says that at no time did those involved with the development of this concept feel that the intern year was anything more than a compromise

From 1964 to 1971 all diploma programs for nursing in Ontario moved to the two-year concept

"From the beginning of nurse preparation up to Aug 31, 1973, the cost of it has been borne by hospitals and latterly the ministry of health of Ontario," she says

"This means that everyone of us has contributed to the cost of preparing nurses through our hospital insurance premiums

The nurses who train at community colleges are required to put in two years with a minimum of 750 hours of theory and 1,200 hours of clinical application for experience

"The work of the student is to learn," says Miss Ward. "This can best be done within the framework of the educational setting which in Canada, has been suggested since 1931

The move to the community colleges has answered the plea of the profession by bringing diploma nursing education into the general education system as one aspect of post-secondary education

"Diploma nursing education will be financed in the same way as all other post-secondary education she says

Miss Ward says she hopes the nursing students will become a part of student life at Durham and she says by having exposure to other disciplines and departments, the nurse of the future will perhaps have a broader education.

Eight prizewinners announced from last nursing class

Eight graduating nurses hold the honor of being the last prize-winning student nurses from the Oshawa General Hospital School of Nursing

Ann Kiezebrink of Cannington is the 1973 recipient of the Adelaide L. McLaughlin prize for general proficiency

The Williams-Robson Memorial prize for the highest standing in theory has been awarded to Dianne Willoughby of Oshawa

Accepting the class of 1972 prize for efficiency in bedside nursing during graduation ceremonies Friday will be Gail Johnson, another Cannington resident

Joy McRae of Oshawa has been awarded the Eleanor Lovell prize for efficiency in obstetric nursing

The Dr W G Watt prize for efficiency in paediatric nursing goes to Margaret MacDonald of Oshawa while the E.A. Lovell prize for proficiency in medical nursing has been won by Mary Fulton of Peterborough

A Bowmanville student Linda Stevens, is the recipient of the Dr G L Bird prize for efficiency in surgical nursing

Marie Clarke of Gander, Nfld is the winner of the E A. Lovell scholarship for post-graduate study

Karen Green, 19, of Ajax, the newly-crowned Miss Oshawa Fair, chats with Joe Elsmore of the Oshawa Park and Recreation department. Combining beauty with brains, Karen is a mathematics student at the University of Waterloo.

Joint planning board ends days preparing a gift for new region

In the remaining six months of its existence, the Central Ontario Joint Planning Board intends to do everything in its power to get the Durham Region off to a good start.

First of all explains planning director Bill McAdams the board wants to complete a number of regional projects at least to a stage where they can be picked up by the regional planning authority.

The board and staff also have to complete work on Bowmanville's new zoning bylaws to implement the town's recently approved official plan and to prepare some planning work for the Central Lake Ontario Conservation Authority.

After these commitments are fulfilled and the board's house is put in order says McAdams the board will undertake projects to specifically assist the reorganization of the local government system.

We think of this as tooling up for the region he says. We're not going to do the work the region should be doing, but provide some help for the new council and staff to get on with their jobs.

One project is the preparation of a compendium of all the planning instruments now in effect in all of the municipalities involved in the Durham Region. The result will be a handy reference folder of existing official plans zoning bylaws and planning policies.

Then we can show the people who are part of the regional administration what they have inherited, says McAdams.

The board also intends to prepare an inventory of basic planning data such as population and employment statistics for the new region and the eight local municipalities.

Both documents can be easily assembled, says the planning director.

As an epilogue to the joint planning board activities over the past eight years the board plans to index all of the policies proposals and data it has gathered and relate board actions to the consequences and to both the Durham Region and the Toronto-centred region plan.

As a final gift to the region the board will study the procedure for processing development applications examine past difficulties and alternative solutions to simplify and streamline the procedure while making it more responsive to citizen input says McAdams.

The result will be a recommendation to the regional council as to ways in which it can process development applications.

This should short-cut the usual lengthy procedure that the regional planning people would have to go through to determine fresh ground rules for subdivision approvals explains the planning director, because much of the work will be done in advance.

The joint planning board has the experience and time necessary to take a preliminary look at subdivision applications local official planning procedures and zoning amendment regulations he says.

We can pinpoint the hang-ups and suggest ways of improving the system. I don't know what the end product will be he says but it will mean the new region can tackle development applications right from the start.

McAdams hopes the joint planning board can contribute to a smooth start for the new regional system.

It's doubly important here to get off to a good start because of the pressures for development.

Healthateria shop

Cucumber cream and vegetable frankfurters are yours for asking

By Garnet Cowsill
Staff Writer

It's a Disneyland for the curious that smells like a drug store. It sells cucumber cold cream and vegetable frankfurters.

You can buy two pounds of sea salt for 55 cents. And if you really wanted a treat, you could buy some seaweed to go along with it.

The shelves are stocked with seeds and grains, honey and dried fruit. They say sunflower seeds are 25 per cent protein and you can buy them there too.

You can buy powder that tastes like coffee but isn't really coffee at all. You can buy chocolate and tea that aren't made from cocoa and tea leaves.

Peanuts are crushed into pure butter, and you can buy brown fertilized farmer eggs fresh from a chicken who is still allowed to run around in a barn yard. And so the list goes on and on.

No, it's not a grocery store from Alice in Wonderland. It's Healthateria Limited, a health food shop upstairs in the Oshawa Shopping Centre.

Everything nowadays is processed and dyed, there are all kinds of additives in foods today, says Lexie Robinson, the store's clerk, who is somewhat of a health food nut herself. This is all natural food.

The store, which opened about three months ago, sells literature on nutrition and the benefits of health foods if you are just getting interested in these age-old but seemingly new culinary ingredients.

The shop sells vitamins and minerals, herb teas and coffee substitutes and myriad natural unprocessed grains, seeds, cereals and flours.

The eggs that are sold, says Mrs. Robinson, are bought initially from Mennonite farmers who don't believe in injecting their fowl with chemicals or using feed chemicals to make them grow quickly, and therefore they don't produce eggs with foreign matter in them.

They are also allowed to run around the barn yard, unlike most egg producing poultry, and this somehow makes the egg a better quality, says Mrs. Robinson. She claims she tried the eggs and would never go back to regular store-bought eggs again.

Aside from eggs, the store sells just about every kind of natural fruit juice, different types of unprocessed oils, fruit candies and even cosmetics made from cucumbers and assorted herbs.

One of the most intriguing items for sale is a can of wieners that are supposed to taste like weiners but are made from all-vegetable ingredients. They are called Linkettes, and you can buy a one-pound can (net weight 19 ounces) for $1.29.

"I haven't tried any of the meats yet," Mrs. Robinson says. "I'm not really gone as they say today on the health foods yet. I'm just sort of half way. But I've been studying nutrition on my own for years."

She says there is a very definite need for a health food outlet in a city like Oshawa. Many of her customers, she says, are beginning to read about nutrition and want to eat what is best for them.

Others who frequent the shop are interested and want to know more about health foods.

Then, she says, there are people who come in and are sick or have allergies and believe that the right food will cure them quicker than a doctor.

Only a small percentage of the clientele are "strict health food nuts," she says. The rest are just starting to learn about it.

"Our clientele is growing all the time because we have become a chemically-oriented society," she says. "Our food is being processed to the point where there is nothing in it to keep you alive. It's just bulk."

Many senior citizens like to buy foods and cosmetics at the store, she says, because they see things like natural foods and soaps that aren't made from chemicals and it reminds them of their childhood on the farm when they ate natural foods and picked things out of their gardens to make soaps and face creams.

Mrs. Robinson disputes the claim by some experts that health food stores are phony.

In a recent Star article, Dr. Alex Morrison, the civil servant examining Canada's food, was quoted as saying that the country's health food industry was "a bit of a rip off."

He claims that compared with ordinary food, so called health foods aren't healthier, but generally just more expensive.

In the same article, health food or organic food is defined as "that grown without artificial chemical fertilizers, pesticides and herbicides and processed without chemical additives."

It's said to be better because residues of these chemicals may harm people who eat food grown or processed with them.

As for the cost, Mrs. Robinson admits that health foods are more expensive than ordinary foods because of the law of supply and demand and because not too many farmers are specializing in growing food organically without the benefit of fertilizers and chemical insecticides. The danger of the farmer losing his crop for just that reason makes the price of his goods higher, she says.

"As I said, I like some of the health foods," she says, "but I really wouldn't want to exist on a strict health food diet."

Greg and Theresa and Dominic learn to live with diabetes

By Garnet Cowsill
Staff Writer

One shot and Greg Bohaker is good for the whole day.

No Bohaker isn't the guy in those deodorant commercials. He's an 11 year old insurance agent who is one of the thousands of Canadians who wake up each morning to a shot of insulin.

Bohaker is a diabetic.

He was first diagnosed while he was a Mountie working with a small RCMP detachment in Labrador in 1964. During a period of about six weeks he says he would become sick for about three days and then he'd get well again.

This happened a couple of times until finally the corporal decided to ship him to a hospital near Goose Bay. During this time he lost 35 pounds.

"I was sound asleep this one day when the nurse woke me up and said 'Here it — about time you learned how to give yourself an insulin injection,' — he says. "I was still half asleep so I just popped the needle in and yanked it out. Nothing to it. The next morning I was awake at four o'clock. I knew she'd be bringing in that needle and I'd have to do it. I was scared — stiff."

At first he says you're really sorry for yourself and you keep on asking "Why me." Then after a while you learn to live with it.

Peculiar disease

Diabetes is a peculiar disease. Doctors don't really know what causes it.

In a healthy person the pancreas secretes insulin which helps the body use sugar and other carbohydrates. If the pancreas becomes inactive and stop producing insulin or if the insulin is not absorbed by the body properly, too much sugar gets into the bloodstream and diabetes results.

Diabetes, says Bohaker, is hard enough on an adult but it's even worse on a child.

"Your friends tease you at school," says Theresa Valic, 13, who is also a diabetic. "They think you're something different than they are because you have to give yourself a needle every day."

Both she and her brother Dominic, 12, have the disease. Dominic was first diagnosed when he was three years old. And then when Theresa was seven, her mother noticed she had the same symptoms as her brother. She tested her urine and sure enough Theresa was spilling sugar.

Both she and her brother have to give themselves insulin injections each morning and are restricted to special diets.

Theresa must consume only 2,400 calories a day. Those calories must be spread over three meals and three snacks so that the insulin always has some food to work on and break down.

No average

It is difficult to say that there is an average daily dose of insulin because each person has to take varying amounts and different types of insulin.

Theresa has to have 75 units of insulin a day. She mixes five units of what is known as "Toronto insulin," a fast-acting drug first discovered by Dr. Best and Banting with 70 units of a slower working insulin known as Lente. She mixes it right in her syringe.

Her brother, on the other hand, only requires 23 units, three of Toronto and 20 of Lente.

Giving herself a needle every day doesn't bother her, she says. There is almost no pain. She just wabs her skin with alcohol and injects the point into the fleshy parts of her skin, her upper arms, abdomen, thighs and legs.

Both she and her brother also have to give themselves urine tests. If either of them is spilling sugar it shows bad control of either their diet or their insulin dosages and so they must read just eat less food and inject more insulin or vice versa.

Summer camp

One of the ways Theresa and Dominic have learned to cope with their disease is by going to a special summer camp, Camp Huronda, which is especially for diabetic children between the ages of eight and 15 and is owned and operated by the Diabetic Association of Ontario.

Located on Lake Wasenosa, 10 miles north west of Huntsville, the 100-acre camp is expertly staffed by two pediatricians, three trained nurses, a qualified dietitian and three dietetic interns.

Each child gets individual attention at the camp in daily adjustment of insulin dosage and dietary needs. Emergency facilities are available at the camp, and the Huntsville hospital is only a few miles away.

The group conditions and informality of the camp offers diabetic children a unique opportunity, says Bohaker, who has raised funds for the camps operation through the Oshawa and district branch of the association.

He says it makes a child feel that he's not different from anyone else and that other kids his age are learning to cope with the disease the same way he is.

The camp facilities can handle 420 campers over four two-week periods. It costs $150 per child, says Bohaker, but if parents can't find the money the association tries to raise it for them to give the child the opportunity.

Unfortunately registrations for the camp have already been filled. If you want further information however, you can write to Camp Huronda, 112 Dundalands Avenue, Toronto.

I think the camp is important for the kids," he says. "They can let their hair down. For a while at least there are no outside pressures."

Insulin reaction

Both Bohaker and the two children admit that the biggest problem of having the disease is the chance of insulin reaction. It is caused by the absence of food for the insulin to act with and can cause serious harm, including a coma and eventually death.

The immediate symptoms are the same as being drunk. A person is pale in complexion, shaky and is prone to slurring words and irregular actions. Most diabetics wear medic alert bracelets so that if they have an attack on the street people will know they are not just drunk.

The treatment is simple: sugar. Bohaker has found that a glass of orange juice acts the quickest to calm things down.

He is convinced that there are many people walking around who have diabetes but don't know it. The symptoms are deceiving. A person usually develops a thirst along with a sudden loss of weight. He feels dragged out and listless almost like he has the flu or a hangover. Sometimes he has eye trouble.

"I believe Bohaker. I walked around with it for two years before I went to a doctor and found out I have it too.

"It's only a mild case. I'm forced to watch my diet, but I'm not on medication."

Theresa Valic displays part of the equipment required to treat her diabetes. It costs from $100 to $120 a year for insulin alone.

MIND DRIVING A TEA METER [illegible] 2 bathrooms Full asking price $3 500.00

We are not judges, but fruit inspectors

By Rev. John A. Robb

The trans-denominational charismatic movement with its heavy emphasis on the gifts of the Holy Spirit has occupied the attention of all thinking churchmen for the last several years.

Not least has been the strong pentecostal movement within the Roman Catholic Church and indeed all of the historic denominations

It is unfortunate that the movement has become, in some quarters, the basis of division rather than tending to promote the unity of the Spirit

One position taken today is to state that the gifts of the Spirit, as set forth clearly in 1 Corinthians, Chapters 12 and 14, were for the founding of the church in the Apostolic age and nobody has any right to be exercising them today!

Let me say, at this juncture that all conservative churchmen are agreed on the necessity of being filled with the Holy Spirit (based on full surrender) which the charismatic movement emphasizes strongly as being the pre-requisite of the gifts

The initial infilling is also referred to in Act. Chapter 1 Verse 5, as "the baptism with the Holy Spirit" (not to be confused with 1 Corinthians 12 and 13)

The other position is that the gifts of the Spirit including tongues, healing and soon are very much for today and that indeed it would not be uncommon to find all of the gifts represented in a particular congregation'

We would emphasize that no single gift is for everyone but that God divides to each person as He wills and not as we might desire

In short, there is only one indispensable sign of the infilling of the Spirit and that is the fruit of the Spirit as set forth in Galatians, Chapter 5 Verses 22-23

While we are not judges, we are fruit inspectors and we have a right to say that if there is no evidence of the fruit of the Spirit the experience has been pseudo

There is no question that when a person is converted the Holy Spirit comes to live in that life However there may be and usually are, some areas of the life that are not as yet fully surrendered

Later, perhaps in a missionary convention somewhere the individual fully surrenders thereby allowing the Holy Spirit to fill the entire life

The writer holds strongly to the second position as listed above and adds that whatever gift the Holy Spirit gives to you as a believer use it to glorify Christ and contribute to the unity of the body. Do not let it become a reason for spiritual pride'

Lastly, any gift that does not contribute to the solidarity of the local church through constant service is not genuine

The marriage of Valerie Elaine Magill, daughter of Mr. & Mrs. Ray Magill, Oshawa to James Thomas Faith son of Mrs. Eunice Beatty of Campbellcroft and the late Raymond Faith, took place in Knox Ukrainian United Church on Saturday June 30 at 4 o'clock with the Rev. W. Herbert officiating, assisted by Mr Ryddid Williams, organist and soloist, Mr. Fred Densham The bride was given in marriage by her father and wore a gown of floor length white nylon organza over taffeta, panels of venise lace graced the front of the gown from the high neckline to the wide flounce on the hem of the gown. It was fashioned with bishop sleeves and full chapel train Her wedding headpiece of matching venise lace caught up her tiered French illusion tulle veil. She carried a bouquet of pink sweetheart roses, baby's breath and daisies. The matron of honor was sister of the bride, Mrs. Karen (James) Wayner of Toronto, bridesmaids were Mrs. Sherry (James) Weldon and Beth MacDonell of Oshawa with Wendy Weldon as flower girl. The brides attendants wore matching gowns of hot pink floor length crepe with sweetheart neckline. The best man was James Weldon of Oshawa Ushers were Warren Magill of Schomberg, brother of the bride, John Beatty of Campbellcroft and Brian Huzar of Oshawa. Following a reception at the Oshawa Shrine Club, the couple left for a honeymoon to Haliburton, Ontario. On their return they will reside at Rosslyn Arms, Stevenson Rd. N. Oshawa

The marriage of Sharon Anne Dove and Frank Peter Baron took place recently at St. Gertrude's Roman Catholic Church with Father John Myers officiating. The bride is the daughter of Mr and Mrs. Harry Dove of 64 Grossmere Ave. in Oshawa and was given in marriage by her father. She wore a full length gown of ciluny lace with a long train, styled with a high neckline and long fitted sleeves. She carried a bouquet of red roses, white carnations and baby's breath and wore her mother's pearls Matron of honour was Mrs Nancy St. Amant with bridesmaids, Mrs Victoria Perkins, Pam Harding, and Theresa Baron The bridegroom son of Mr and Mrs Frank Baron of 809 Regent Drive, was assisted by John Vet [illegible] as best man and ushers Bruce Kennedy Karl Baron and Mark Baron Christine Dove was flowergirl and Kevin Perkins, ringbearer. The reception took place at St Gertrude's [illegible] Hawkesbury and Peterborough Mr and Mrs Baron plan to reside in [illegible]

St. Marks United Church, Whitby was the scene of the wedding of Judith-Ann Pinch, only daughter of Mrs Ruby Pinch and the late Bruce Pinch, and Richard Brian, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Jansen, all of Whitby. The wedding took place Saturday June 16th at 2 PM. Judith's gown of white French sheer silk was traditional. The deep ruffle at the skirt hem flared at the back to form a formal train. Trim was stand-out flower appliques of white velvet, at the neckline and above the hem ruffle The ruffled high puff sleeves were trimmed with white satin ribbon and repeated on the train ruffle.
Her waist length veil was a face-framing cup of seed pearls.
She carried a large nosegay of summer pink, blue and white flowers, mostly roses, and pink baby breath forming a lace effect.
Her only attendant was Miss Deborah Maycher of Prince Albert She was gowned in baby pink and white French nylon trimmed with shocking pink velvet Her petite hat of white French braid was trimmed with shocking pink velvet ribbon and she carried an identical nosegay fashioned after the bride's
The best man was Mr. Dennis Doner and usher was Mr Gordon Schad, both of Whitby
A dinner followed at the Holiday Inn, pool-side, for the wedding party and guests. Later a reception was held at the bride's home, 1111 Dundas St. E., Whitby The happy couple are residing in Whitby.

Judith-Ann Pinch was hosted at several showers prior to her recent marriage to Brian Jansen
Mrs. Earl Dilling and daughter Cyndy gave a miscellaneous shower at their home
Mrs. John Maycher and daughter Deborah hosted a miscellaneous shower at Prince Albert
Mrs. Grant Butt and Mrs. John Parayko held a pantry and kitchen shower at the home of Mrs Butt.
Mrs Winda Vos assisted by her mother, Mrs. A. Vos hosted a miscellaneous shower at their home
Mrs. Peter Matthews hosted a personal shower at her home.
The Pinch family held a money shower presentation
Mrs. Cecil Jansen hosted a Sunday afternoon tea in honour of Judith-Ann prior to the wedding.

In beginning God created the heavens and the earth Satan knew this He probably was there for the stars sang and sons of God shouted for joy when the foundations of the earth were laid That the Lord claimed all power in heaven and earth may not have disturbed Satan too much for up to that time all the redemptive purpose seemed to be directed to the earth, not the heavens So Satan was probably not very much worried until the events of the time of the Acts were completed and it was revealed that there was a chosen people who would go to heaven some day

That the dominion given to Adam should some day extend into the heavens probably never entered the mind of Satan He knew that Israel was to be a channel of blessing to the nations of the earth He knew that during the Pentecostal economy Gentiles had been grafted into the olive tree and partook of the blessings of Israel He knew that they were blest with faithful Abraham None of these things was a part of the mystery or secret

So today Satan is not only fighting for the rule over the earth, but he is fighting to maintain his position in heaven But he will be cast out some day He probably does not believe that He does not have the capacity of believing any more He chose his own way and questioned the Word of God So like many today who do not take God seriously Satan is blinded and cannot know the truth He is the liar

Like Satan many Christians today have been deceived and have not come to the truth because they rejected the facts long ago Many of them are leaning on being blest with Abraham not knowing that the dispensation of promise is not in effect and that no one can enter into the kingdom or be blest with faithful Abraham The church is blest with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places in Christ

Many have been misled and so they think that being joint heirs in the church is that Jew and Gentile have been joined together and made partakers of the blessings of Abraham not the church But in the church there is no wall of partition, Jew and Gentile are one and the whole is called Gentiles after the new creation is related in Eph 2

The final capstone of the mystery of Christ is the dispensation of the mystery It is not that He is Head of all things to the church, and also Head of all creation both heaven and earth This revelation was given by a special dispensation of the grace of God to the apostle Paul so that he might make it known to the nations And so the salvation of God was sent to the Gentiles, no longer is salvation of the Jews as it had been before

Those who receive the gospel of the mystery and believe, receive the adoption of sons, and are placed among those chosen from before the overthrow of the world So it is that one is saved by faith thru grace and created in Christ Jesus unto good works which befit the calling and dispensation Those under age and not sons have no work as [illegible] They are still children but have life [illegible] to not want to work, so do not receive the adoption

Show that you're competent, remember enough to pass the government course examinations, put in the required effort and learning time and you can get a paper that officially calls you a real estate sales representative. But that's all it does, it doesn't guarantee you'll be a success that's entirely up to you

At Young & Biggin we've taken steps to do more than just help you get a license. We're the first company in our field to install a closed circuit television system as part of our latest training program and we've secured exclusive Metropolitan Toronto rights to the best in-depth, video reality sales course ever produced. $250,000 went into the development of the R S T training system. Twenty hours of taped programs by the world's top experts are integrated with the live lectures and seminars

If you join our instruction program, you can study while earning a living in real estate. Y&B offers daytime courses or special night classes and it's absolutely free

If you are thinking of a career in the real estate business, with top commissions, you owe it to your future to speak with Jim Jameson about the unique Y & B training system.

You can call him at 942-4751. YOUNG AND BIGGIN LTD., REALTOR

BOND TOWERS

We're sorry....

We regret that during the past few weeks, due to last-minute construction, our model suite has been slightly less than accessible. However, our elevators are now operating to capacity, our lobby is sparkling clean, and we are looking forward to showing you through the finest apartment building in Oshawa. We have just a few suites left - so don't delay.

Some 2-bedroom apartments still available from $204 mo.

2-bedroom apartments with study from $232 mo.

- All-electric heat
- Fully air-conditioned
- All large balconies
- City buses at door
- Pressurized hallways
- Indoor parking

MODEL SUITE OPEN — Tuesday to Friday, 2 to 8 P.M.
WEEKENDS — 2 to 6 P.M. or anytime by appointment.

Doc's Queen's Park Diagnosis

By Dr Charlie McNaughton
M.P.P. Oshawa

It's been three weeks since my column last appeared in This Week.

After the letdown of that last two weeks before "The House" adjourned with the wee-small-hours sitting plus early morning meetings, I let everything go that couldn't be avoided. Now I'm back in the swim and ready to go.

Just before the house adjourned, I introduced a private members bill entitled: An Act To Provide For The Controlling Of Hours In Commercial Establishments.

If any of my readers would like a copy of this act, I would be pleased to supply one. I would also welcome your comments.

Oversimplified, this bill would regulate retail establishments to stay open on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., on Thursday and Friday from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m., and on Saturday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

No Sunday retail selling or selling on 10 statutory holidays would be allowed.

This act would not apply to small corner stores, gas stations and the like.

So far, I have had approximately 200 letters from Oshawa residents and another 300 from elsewhere in Ontario, with only three letters criticizing the main intent of the bill although I have had many suggestions on how the bill could be improved.

I would appreciate your ideas too. Only if you take the time to let me know your views can I be expected to truly represent the wishes of my constituents.

If any of my readers are contemplating an automobile excursion this summer, I would be pleased to supply, upon request, a book entitled Ontario/Canada Adventures. Dozens of great ideas for a vacation are given.

Next week I hope to summarize the recommendations of the first interim report of our select committee on community use of schools.

Fiddling around at the Oshawa Fair

Equality of the sexes was apparent at the Old Tyme Fiddlers Contest that took place during last week's Oshawa Fair. A total of 25 entrants took part in the foot stomping event

A variety of merchants participate in sidewalk sale

By Jane Milne
Staff Writer

Merchants representing a wide variety of retail outlets are taking part in the downtown sidewalk sale Thursday and Friday

Nesbitt's Ladies Wear on King Streeh East will have some special prices on summer clothes with savings up to 50 per cent

Don't let the $1 000 shirt scare you away from Sam Rotish Men's Wear just down the street. Men's shirts summer jackets and the odd sports jacket will be on sale also with up to 50 per cent off

Pleased with the idea of the sidewalk display, the owner of Rotish's says he thinks the extra work is worthwhile and he would like to see all of the downtown stores participate

For the children of the family a large variety of stylish clothes are available at the Young Moderns store at 38 King Street East

"We have everything imaginable from infants to teenage sizes for girls, and infants to size 14 for boys, says manager, Vera Markus

Most of the children's clothes are summer items but she says other bargains are thrown in such as fall underwear by Ladybird and Harvey Woods

"We will have half price specials on racks and tables and also a $1 grab table of all kinds of specials, says Mrs Markus

Pre-teen pant sets will be on sale at the store with a good assortment of colors for the girls and she says boys pants in patterned and plain baggies will be available from sizes two to 14 and with up to 50 per cent off

For the family's entertainment Granada TV Rental will have a special offer during the sale of a 25-inch color television which regularly rents for $27 per month for $23 per month

Because of insurance we can't put our merchandise out on the street says manager Bill Davis. "If its a sunny day people wouldn't be able to see the picture anyway so we're putting on a big sound system and we'll be playing the song 'Downtown' for the sale"

Granada deals only in color televisions and has been located on King Street East for just one year.

"We are looking forward to participating in our first sidewalk sale," says Davis.

Osborne's Home and Decorating Centre at 55 King Street East will have both exterior and interior paint on sale on Thursday and Friday and a few doors down, Video Optical will offer prescription glasses at 10 per cent off along with a sale of sunglasses and a display of frames

Jury's and Lovell Drug Store on King Street will offer cokes at 10 cents each to the thirsty shoppers as well as many items from the store which have been greatly reduced

All Max Factor cosmetics for example will be sold with 50 per cent off and savings are available on toys toiletries sunglasses and paint brushes

The staff of Jury's and Lovell agree that the sidewalk sale is a good idea and that it brings attention to the downtown area

"We were one of the first stores to participate in these sales and now it is widespread, says one of the store's employees "I think the idea of free bus service for the public on Thursday morning is a terrific idea this year

Buses downtown are free to those passengers using them Thursday morning between 9 15 a m and 10 45 a m

Oshawa sidewalks offer bargains

An event billed as Oshawa's biggest sidewalk sale ever is scheduled to begin Thursday

Sponsored by the Downtown Oshawa Association this year's events include street displays as well as retail sales in the downtown business area

"Specials will appear continuously all day on Thursday and Friday this week with Thursday opening morning specials that are so great, the whole PUC Transit system has been hired to bring shoppers downtown from 9-15 a m to 10 45 a m," says Jack Leishman, president of the association

"Hop on the early bird express and ride for free on Thursday" he says "It's the biggest two days ever"

Last car rolls off the line

Amid cheers from his fellow workers at General Motors, utility repairman Leonard Foster drove the final car of the 1973 model year off GM's assembly line last week

The cheers signified the start of summer vacations for the men as GM began its shutdown period for changeover in preparation for the 1974 models

GM produced 331,366 cars in Oshawa since the start of the model year last September.

The 1974 models will begin rolling off the line in mid-August once the men have returned to work

She couldn't get bathing suit to fit, so she joined

This is the first summer in many years that an Oshawa woman has been able to go swimming

No she didn't have a great fear of the water or any medical reason that would not allow her to swim The fact is she was fat So fat that she couldn't find a bathing suit that would fit her before joining Weight Watchers of Ontario and losing 102 pounds

"We have to learn to use the word fat says Vi Sproule, lecturer of Weight Watchers "We are all here at Weight Watchers for the very same problem"

Since losing the 102 pounds the woman says climbing flights of stairs is no longer the ordeal it used to be and she feels much better

I am looking forward to wearing nice clothes again and my husband and children are proud of me now," she says.

Based on the Canadian Family Meal Plan, the Weight Watchers diet enables all members of the family to eat well on it since it includes such things as spareribs and bread as well as protein foods of eggs, fish and meat

Weekly meetings of Weight Watchers are held at four locations in Oshawa at St. John's, St. Paul's, St. Andrew's, and St. Luke's Halls for approximately 200 members with classes also available in Bowmanville, Ajax and Bay Ridges.

"The meetings are very important," says Mrs. Sproule The members motivate each other when they weigh in each week, praising the person who lost weight or helping someone get back on the right track if they've gained"

Weight Watchers pay $7 to join and $3 per week but those who lose all their excess weight and keep their ideal weight permanently, never gaining more than two pounds, earn a life-time membership and are not required to pay again.

Mrs. Sproule says the members are advised to go to a doctor before joining Weight Watchers and that many doctors refer their over-weight patients to the organization

"We do recommend exercising," she s says, 'but to each his own. The first exercise I would like to see our members learn is the closing of the refrigerator door and pushing themselves away from the table

Since the establishment of Weight Watchers in October in 1967, the members have found restaurants becoming more conscious of their efforts and have included in menus the type of foods they require to be faithful to their diets

The members cocome from all walks of life and Mrs Sproule says in her visits to various clubs throughout Southern Ontario she sees the rich and poor all nationalities and age groups

"We have one 13 year-old and a woman who is 73 years old who has lost over 100 pounds"

She says another important benefit of Weight Watchers is that members are now training their children in better eating habits so they will never go through what their parents did

In the swim again

Linda Russo of Oshawa (right) has good reason to smile as she finds that she has lost 102 pounds through the Weight Watchers program. She became determined to diet when she could no longer find a bathing suit to fit her. Zandra Carrell, who has lost 71 pounds through the program, helps Linda adjust the scales.

Italian Club public on Saturdays

Since its beginning in the fall of 1970, the Italian Club of Oshawa has gone through many changes and has plans for even more

Esther Cucinato and her husband, a director of the club, have worked with other club members during the last three years to build it up and plan cultural recreational and social activities.

"If the response is great enough," says Mrs. Cucinato, "we hope to offer courses in English for newly-arrived immigrants We now hold a dance every two weeks from September to June as well as special occasion types of activities at Christmas and our Miss Italian pageant."

The club also brings in entertainment for the members and she says they would like to eventually start a choir, have classes in folk dancing and perhaps teach Italian children the language of their forefathers

"We have already had an Italian soccer team and about four banquets a year but we would like to get into more cultural types of activities."

Located on Simcoe Street South in Oshawa the renovated hall is fully licensed and open every night of the week to members and their guests and open to the public on Saturday

During Fanfare, she says that the people who visited the hall were about 85 per cent non-Italian

"We really would like to have more people come to our club," says Mrs. Cucinato "We're here for the whole community, not just our own ethnic group."

Lasagna, spagetti and meat balls and ravioli were the most popular Italian dishes at the Italian pavilion during Fanfare and Mrs. Cucinato says the club hopes to offer these dishes at some of the Saturday night dances in the future.

Girlwatchers had a field day at the Oshawa Fair last week. Besides the judging of the Ontario County Dairy Princess and Miss Oshawa Fair competitions, there were showgirls galore at the various programs of entertainment.

Group prepares for Christmas in summer

While most people are enjoying these long summer days, there are many residents of Ontario County who are already preparing for Christmas

No, the sales are not yet upon us for bargain gift buying, but rather volunteers of the Ontario County Tuberculosis and Respiratory Disease Association are addressing Christmas Seal envelopes in readiness for the campaign in November

"We usually mail out the seals on Nov. 1 for people to use on Christmas mail to go overseas," says Madeline Collins, executive director of the association "We have already given out several thousand envelopes to volunteers to address at home by hand and we are trying to update our mailing lists."

Through its Christmas Seal campaign, funds are raised for the association's programs in health education rehabilitation and research into respiratory diseases including asthma chronic bronchitis, emphysema and tuberculosis - the latter, a disease which struck more than 5,000 Canadians last year

Memorial gifts to the association are also used to further research.

Programs include refresher courses in respiratory diseases for nurses and seminars for medical, paramedical and nursing personnel as well as physical conditioning courses for asthmatic children.

"The conditioning courses held at the Civic Auditorium help so much the frightened children who suffer from asthma attacks," she says "The courses include a physiotherapist who teaches them to breathe from the diaphragm and to become completely relaxed during an attack so that they can save their energy."

Mrs Collins says the parents of these children work very hard with them and while the children are exercising, hear lectures given by doctors, nutritionists or other medical personnel

"The parents observe the children exercising and quite often a few of the parents participate in the exercises. The children are so proud to show their parents what they can do," she says

Another program sponsored by the association with great success, was the baby sitting course for the care of "special children."

This included instruction in caring for children with handicaps other than respiratory ailments such as retardation

"One thing I have found during my 20 years with the association," says Mrs Collins, "is the co-operation amongst organizations and services throughout the county Just because an agency is in one field of interest doesn't mean they don't want to help people in another field

Another reason why she says the association has been successful is because of the dedication of the board members who come to meetings in all weather from all over the county driving sometimes 40 or 60 miles

Even though many people have cut down on their mailing lists at Christmas because of increases in postage, Mrs Collins says people still send in a contribution

this week

Vol 4 No 31 — 15 CENTS ON YOUR NEWS STAND — Wednesday August 1 1973

Walter Beath, the newly-appointed chairman of the Durham region, says an overall plan for the region is of primary importance Beath was sworn in Tuesday See page 6B

A monumental planning effort to prepare the region to cope with intense development pressures will be the major task confronting the Durham Regional Council, says its newly appointed chairman Walter Beath.

Beath was baptized yesterday in an elaborate Queen's Park ceremony following weeks of rumors and constant denials as the first supermayor of the Durham Region.

"The Durham Region is the only one ever established to have all planning authority at the top level," Beath told This Week in an exclusive interview. "This indicates that the province anticipates some special problems here that the region needs a strong coordinated voice in planning."

An over-all plan for the region at the earliest possible moment is a must because of the already substantial demand for additional serviced land for residential and industrial development says the regional chairman. This requirement is substantiated, he says, by the fact that four regional municipalities are hastening approval of a revised official plan. These new plans will have to guide development for the three years the regional council has been given to come up with a regional official plan

A regional plan is important to permit both municipalities and existing residents determine their futures, he stresses. The East Whitby farmer has a 200-acre farm on Townline Road just east of Columbus. As a farmer he will gauge future investment by the guidelines for development established by the region.

His first task as regional chairman, says Beath, is to oversee the compilation of pertinent data to enable the regional council to make important decisions very shortly after it takes office

An inventory has to be made of all staff people presently working for the municipalities to become part of the region and some kind of recommendations have to be made as to who should fit in where, he says. The chairman and the municipalities will also have to face the problem of unifying bylaws and establishing new ground rules for amalgamated municipalities. The regional council has to set down its priorities at an early date as well, says Beath.

"There are going to be some unpleasant things to do," he admits.

But Beath downplays the importance of the chairman to the region.

"Some of the top staff members will be maybe even more important than the chairman," he says, suggesting the need for an able and experience chief administrative officer and that there are plenty of people on staff now who could fill the bill admirably

"There has never been a person who couldn't be replaced," says the chairman. "No one person will be responsible for making the region work. Everyone is responsible — the province, the chairman, the councillors, the staff, the electorate, the media.

Beath anticipates little trouble in getting the various factions of the region to work together. All of the municipalities involved, except Oshawa, have long been familiar with teamwork in the form of county governments. But Oshawa has had that kind of experience in the Central Ontario Joint Planning Board and the Oshawa Area Planning and Development Study, he notes.

"Whoever the chairman is," says Beath, "the region is going to work - how well, depends on how well the people want it to work. I don't think there'll be a problem."

The chairman feels that the municipalities will soon learn how to make trade-offs to achieve the best for their own town and for the region as a whole

Eventually, parochialism will wear off, he predicts, and will be replaced by a regional orientation.

"You have to get rid of that natural bias," he says. "I've tried not to have it."

Beath feels that neither Oshawa nor the rural areas will come out of regional government as badly off as skeptics in both communities have feared. Certainly the rural areas will have to bear a share of Oshawa's debt, he says, but they'll also benefit by Oshawa's wealth of assessment. The city people too, he says, will have to learn to respect the rural environment which the country people are so proud of

Denturist bill will turn a professional into a dentist's employee

A lot of people who make false teeth will soon be going to jail it seems, and for what?

The provincial government, following Health Minister Dr. Richard Potter's recommendation, recently passed Bill 246 which will make a career out of making dentures, no matter how many qualifications and certificates they now hold

The bill also puts these people under the direct supervision of a dentist, where previously they could operate under the free enterprise system -- independently

The bill, however, does have the right intentions. It was initially introduced in an effort to make low-cost dentures available to the public. But while doing so, it may have also completely obliterated a profession, that of the denturists

There are many gaps in the bill which leave a lot to be desired

For instance, the new licensing board, established under the bill to review exams and grant licences, unlike most other licence granting boards, will have only a small minority of the licenced professionals on it

The board will be made up of four members representing the public interest, one dental surgeon, two denturists (or denture therapists as they are called under the bill) one dental technician and one dental hygienist. All that is needed for a board quorum is five of its members

All of which means that a board which is supposed to have licensing controls on denturists could get together and pass bylaws and revoke licences without ever having to have a denturist in on the discussions

Added to this, dentists will be able to just about set their denturist assistant's salary. The bill makes no provisions for the payment of the men who must work under the dentists

Under the bill it is unlawful to practise denture therapy or make or repair denture plates unless a person is under the eye of a dentist. A denturist cannot solicit his own clients, nor bill them

He must be called in by a dentist to treat a dentist's patient, and in the end, his work must be approved by a dentist. But when it comes to a malpractice suit, even though it is the dentist's patient, the dentist is held liable for only six months after the work is completed. The denturist, on the other hand, is liable for up to two years

Those in favor of the bill have said that denturists currently practising are afraid to take the exams for fear of failing them, and would rather go to jail. That in itself seems an odd paradox What kind of person would be less afraid of going to jail than taking an exam?

Denturists say they will take the exam if they could be allowed to practise independently through referrals from dentists. That suggestion was offered to Potter and he turned it down, they say

Why?

Some denturists maintain he refused suggestions from denturists because Potter himself is a medical professional and has the other professionals at heart. Some say because the dentists themselves lobbied hard for the bill.

It is now apparent that without these two groups of professionals co-operating the whole low-cost denture theory will go down the drain

Denturists say they are determined to continue to practise without the licence which makes them liable to a maximum of six months in jail and a $2,000 fine, or both

They'll go to jail. Why?

Perhaps because a majority government can be as arbitrary as it wants to

Whitby lesson

The success of Fanfare week indicated that perhaps a spirit of community was developing in Oshawa.

But the good-heartedness and sense of community seems to have gone as quickly as it came Only five months remain until Oshawa celebrates its 50th birthday as a city and little progress to date has been made on plans for a celebration

The social services committee of council, it is true, has made some efforts toward organizing a golden anniversary program, but it has been stymied by council's reluctance to budget any money.

This looks especially bad in view of the fun and goodtimes organized in Whitby for Homecoming '73.

Tied in with the County Town Carnival this week, Homecoming Week in Whitby has been a tremendous success with the return of hundreds of former residents from all over Canada.

Some even made the trip from Europe and England. But that's the kind of town Whitby is The town doesn't quibble about nickels and dimes. It knows how to put on a good time and make everyone feel welcome

Oshawa is four times the size of its nextdoor neighbor. If the city is willing to learn from small Whitby in the matter of public spirit and parties, it could be a fun place to live.

Our city fathers and mothers should let down their hair and try it for a change. A festive and well-organized celebration of Oshawa's 50th anniversary might be the stimulus to create a true community out of the raw material of 93,000 people.

Justice is blind, they say, and so perhaps are some motorists. An editorial in last week's issue admonished city hall, and the works department in particular, for not giving motorists enough warning about detours where there is road reconstruction. Particularly, we were speaking about the Cromwell-Park Road area. A couple of This Week staffers even got caught 10 feet from the construction site without seeing signs beforehand. Bob Duignan of the city's traffic department took one reporter out last week to show him how nearsighted we were. There are 35 signs all placed in strategic locations saying detour, road closed, Highway 401 thisaway, and so on. Which just goes to prove that some people can't see the trees for the forest...or something like that.

The movie industry gives its members Oscars, the television industry hands out Emmies and recording artists are given Grammies. It's good for business and is a nice way for keeping everybody in the industry happy. We in the weekly newspaper business have a similar practice. Every year we select a paper which for that year can call itself the best weekly newspaper in Canada. This year, it's the turn of a neighbor of ours, the Ajax News-Advertiser. It hasn't been made public yet, but we understand the Canadian Community Newspaper Association has given the nod to the Ajax-based weekly

If the rest of the Whitby Town Carnival is as enjoyable as the events so far, the organizers deserve a real pat on the back. It's great to see so many people obviously having a good time. And, like anything that runs as smoothly as the carnival, the people behind the scenes have brought this about with a lot of hard work that too often goes unrecognized.

Beath appointment shows preference for mediator

by linda sutton

Finally, after two weeks' delay the provincial government confirmed Tuesday what many people suspected all along - that East Whitby farmer Walter Beath is the chairman of the Durham Region.

The decision came as something of a surprise to Beath who never applied for the job, was never interviewed, and was not notified until last Friday. In fact for weeks while he was rumored to be the provincial choice, Beath continued to deny he was to be the man.

Although obviously a compromise selection designed to provoke the least opposition from all of the municipalities involved in the region, Beath is not unqualified for the job of supermayor.

He has been the fair-minded chairman of the Central Ontario Joint Planning Board for many years and was the second and last chairman of the Oshawa Area Planning and Development Study. As OAPADS chairman he proved to be a mediator but also a man who was quietly prepared to stand his ground.

Beath never makes a fuss but he does have convictions and a regional orientation He won't be a flashy chairman in the style of a Paul Godfrey or the aggressive leader that Des Newman would have been as regional chairman

But Chairman Beath has always been in the forefront with respect to progressive planning and municipal reorganization. He's not an innovator but he is receptive to innovative ideas and no doubt would establish this kind of an atmosphere during his three-year tenure.

Now that he has been sworn in as chairman in an elaborate ceremony at Queen's Park Tuesday, Beath will be busy in the initial stages of organizing the administration of the regional government. Probably his first duty will be to appoint a clerk for the region.

But the most crucial decision he will be involved in, possibly in advance of the first meeting of the regional council in mid-October, will be the selection of the chief administrative person.

The chairman and the regional manager will have to become an effective team, proposing policies and overseeing implementation.

With the selection of Beath, the province has made it clear that Durham's first chairman has to be a mediator, a man who can fashion a cohesive region, uniting the various factions - urban and rural, parts of two counties, sophisticated and progressive politicians and the grassroots, don't-want-to-spend-a-buck variety

Beath himself is probably very representative of the region - a rural man with an understanding of urban problems and solutions, a cautious progressive man with a strong desire to be of service and few personal ambitions.

As chairman, Beath has a high chance of success in his efforts to make the region work, to overcome the fears of each municipality that the regional government formation will hurt them.

By the end of his tenure, representatives of all the municipalities will probably be working together for the best interests of the region instead of working against each other for the profit of their own municipalities.

But is this enough of an accomplishment in three years?

The region, at least the southern portion along the lakeshore, is already being subjected to fierce pressure from developers. It will have to cope with escalating residential, commercial and industrial growth as well as with the injection of two special developments - the international airport and the new townsite of North Pickering.

To deal with these pressures successfully will require imagination and daring during these all-important three years.

Beath and his council must be prepared to meet the challenge and the key will be an aggressive, able and imaginative chief executive officer.

A few men within the region would be logical candidates for this job - Des Newman of Whitby, John Kruger of Pickering, Frank Markson of Oshawa, the executive director of OAPADS Ted Sims of Whitby, Graham Coulter of Oshawa, Charles Shelley, Pickering's former township manager

All have relevant experience and the kind of qualities necessary to help lead the region into the future Choosing the best man will be Beath's first difficult task.

Be a people's candidate and sling all the mud

by tom douglas

As I write this, the name of the regional chairman for our area is just about to be revealed. This will signal the start of another election campaign with everybody and his brother (make that sister, all you women's libbers) vying for a position on regional council

Elections are to be held October 1 and while the next few months will be a hectic time for newsmen, covering political rallies and so on, it will also be a time of relative peace and tranquillity

This seeming paradox is brought about by the fact that once a politician finds himself in a political battle, his view of the media changes

Where he once sat snug and smug in his political office accusing reporters of misquoting him whenever he said something that made him look like a fool in retrospect, now he won't be able to do enough for them.

And where he once wailed time and again that editors were slanting their stories (or their headlines) in an attempt to "get" him, he'll now be calling them up wanting to take them to lunch and complimenting them on the great job they're doing.

It's one of the occupational hazards we in the media have grown accustomed to and accept, like a fellow on the line accepts the drudgery of turning thousands of bolts a half twist to the right during an eight-hour shift.

But for those political aspirants who have never gone through the circus of an election campaign, allow me to offer you a piece of advice -- run as a "people's candidate"

You know the type. He declares that he's against pollution, "ruthless" developers, big business, "crooked" politicians (meaning the incumbent he's running against) and all the other things that it's so easy to attack without having to expend too much brainpower on

Toronto Alderman John Sewell could perhaps be used as an example of a people's candidate to the extent that he finds it a good gambit to make personal attacks on political opponents over issues that he knows will stir up the public.

Sewell covets the position of Metro chairman and has been fighting an uphill battle against Paul Godfrey, the acting chairman

So Sewell last week launched a rather nasty tirade against Godfrey in hopes of discrediting the acting chairman in the eyes of the public

Sewell's argument against naming Godfrey the permanent chairman was based on two points -- with the obvious invitation to the public to connect the points and therefore deduce that Godfrey is a shady operator who should not be trusted with the position.

Sewell's first potshot concerned Godfrey's $53,000 home in Don Mills. Sewell, commenting on something that was absolutely none of his business, said he couldn't help but be suspicious of a man in Godfrey's position who could pay cash for such an expensive home.

He followed this up with the contention that Godfrey was unsuited for the chairman's job because "he's gone on at least four or five gambling junkets to Las Vegas."

You see the connection? Godfrey is a big-time gambler who was able to pay cash for an expensive home with his gambling winnings and so is unsuited for the position of Metro chairman.

What right does he have to make snide remarks about the fellow he's running against? Why, he's a people's candidate, a champion of the downtrodden, fighting somebody with "ill-gotten" gains, so he's entitled to make any accusation he cares to, no matter how unfair and damaging to the other fellow's reputation.

This Week given in-depth look at the Ontario ministry of health

This Week has been chosen by the Ontario ministry of health to participate in a unique exercise designed to bring to the public a better understanding of the role of the ministry

Last week, five members of our editorial staff spent a day in Toronto interviewing the key people in the ministry, including Health Minister Dr. Richard Potter and the various deputy ministers

The results of this in-depth session can be found in the second section of this week's issue. The ministry will be reprinting the articles and distributing them to weekly newspapers throughout the province

Don Soutter, communications consultant to the ministry and a former newspaper editor with 20 years experience in journalism, said This Week was chosen for the exercise because it had a staff that obviously could handle such an assignment competently and accurately

'We wanted a paper large enough to be able to spare the experienced people required to meet with the 20 or so key people in the ministry,'' he said. ''This Week was recommended to us by several sources.'

Soutter said the ministry felt there was a need to outline what it was trying to do in the health field to the people of the province and that one of the best ways to do so was through the weekly press

He said that since the ministry would have no power of censorship over what would be written following the interviews, it was prepared ''to take its lumps'' as a result of the articles

This is a novel approach for a government body, but we are confident that we are on the right track in what our ministry is doing and that This Week will reflect this accurately

The day-long session consisted of 16 interviews with the people in charge of various departments within the ministry, a luncheon session with the various deputy ministers and a one-hour conference with Dr Potter

Staff Writer John Bell (left) interviews Harry Gray, co-ordinator of health disciplines for the ministry of health during an all-day session between This Week staffers and senior ministry personnel.

Builder says NDP housing critic offers no solution

Sir:

About the only statement that made sense to me in Ed Broadbent's letter to your paper two weeks ago in reply to an earlier one of mine was that I am too busy to read everything that appears in print about him

However, he was kind enough to send me copies of recent speeches he has given on the subject of housing and having read them, would like the opportunity to reply to them and to his letter

One thing I will attempt to do though is refrain from quoting meaningless statistics and from using sarcasm in place of logic

Nor will I employ adjectives and trite phrases that attempt to close the mind of the reader to any opinion but my own, as Mr Broadbent has done He refers to my opinions as "bizarre economic theories" Bizarre in Mr Broadbent's opinion perhaps

He says that "all serious economists" would disown these theories By serious economists no doubt he means those economists who agree with him

He refers to Ayn Rand (although I fail to see what this had to do with the matter) and says his "more able students" rejected her philosophy I pity the poor students who did not reject her philosophy and therefore, by Mr. Broadbent's own admission, would be judged by him as less able than those who did

But enough of Mr Broadbent's way with words. After all, he is a politician and the knack of using words to suit his own purposes is to be expected

However, what I found disturbing about Mr Broadbent's speeches is that while he can criticize present government policy on housing (and in this area we tend to agree) he offers no real solutions and in some of his theories he is so naive that one can only wonder why he would tackle the subject in the first place

For instance, he suggests that federally-chartered financial institutions be compelled to allocate capital for housing "at a rate not exceeding the prime interest rate, plus a small administration fee

As a minimum, this would mean a mortgage interest rate at least 2-½ per cent below present rates he said in one speech

Mr Broadbent, the current prime interest rate is 7-¾ per cent and the mortgage rate is 9-¾ per cent, so that in fact the mortgage rates are now only two per cent above the prime interest rate Your mathematics escapes me

Mr. Broadbent also states that at the present rate of interest, the average homebuyer would pay $115,000 over 35 years for a house valued at $45,000 today

What he fails to point out, of course, is that with our rate of inflation, the average worker making $5 an hour today will no doubt more than double that within the next 10 years so that over a 35-year period, this $115,000, if we accept Mr Broadbent's figures, would represent about one-sixth of his income, a fair price for accommodation by anyone's standards

Also, if he were to keep the home for 35 years, taking inflation into consideration once again, he would be able to sell that house which is worth $45,000 today for about $150,000

Mr Broadbent says that 20 per cent of our population is inadequately housed If we accept this statement and compare this with some of the Iron Curtain countries where his theories are employed, we would find that 80 per cent of the population is inadequately housed

In East Germany, for instance, an apartment comparable to ours (and these are few) rents for 60 marks a month A well-paid tradesman earns about three marks an hour and cannot afford such accommodation especially when he pays eight marks for a pound of tomatoes 40 marks for a pound of coffee and the equivalent of 52 cents for one egg

Families have to wait years for a one or two-room flat and they have no choice of where they want to go New apartments are few and most of the houses are in such a bad state of repair that in 10 years time they will have a housing crisis we cannot even conceive of

Mr Broadbent suggests that we start a social housing program What does he mean? We have a number of social housing programs Rochdale is one of them

I would like to know what he means when he talks of a land speculator. Is he referring to all the farmers who sold their land? Does he mean anyone who sells land for a profit? Would he sell something for less than its market value

Readers write

Which brings up another point Does Mr Broadbent realize that union pension funds are one of the major sources of mortgage money? They obviously believe there is nothing wrong with making a profit from today's homebuyer

The sad part about this whole matter is that not too many years ago, the average young married couple could afford to buy a house in Oshawa. I know this because I sold them. It's not the developer or the builder who has closed the doors to these people

We would be foolish to do so The government at all three levels has done this, partly through their taxation policies and partly through their failure to provide more land for housing

But probably the saddest thing of all to evolve from this issue is that Mr. Broadbent, the NDP critic for housing, has failed to see the real problem.

The big times

Sir:

I wish to make reference to an article which appeared on your front page on Wednesday, July 25 regarding the McLaughlin Square and I quote in part

The statements made public by a small local daily newspaper were confidential and should not have been released until the information was before the Planning Board, DeHart says" end of quote

It would appear that I have referred to the Oshawa Times as being a small local daily newspaper

I would strongly point out to This Week that at no time did I express these remarks regarding the Oshawa Times

This has caused me a great deal of concern and embarrassment as a city alderman

I would therefore ask This Week to retract this statement that appeared in your newspaper

Thanking you for your co-operation in this pertinent matter

Ald. John DeHart
Oshawa

Editors Note: Would you believe a large local daily newspaper?

Mary 'the Mouth'

Sir:

I am writing this letter in regards to the article by Mary Margaret Allen in the July 25, 1973 issue of 'This Week

It seems to me that Mary 'the Mouth' is one of those people who is looking for a cause and attempts to discuss it, no matter if they know what they're talking about or not. Mary 'the Mouth' obviously has little or no knowledge of the balance of Nature

Formerly this balance took care of itself, but man's intervention (before our generation) in the form of hunting and the spread of civilization has upset this balance Now man must work to help maintain this balance and the only way is by hunting

I am speaking specifically of the deer population. The natural predator of the deer population is the wolves mainly This animal has been hunted and forced back into the wilderness, so that it isn't able to keep as close a check on the deer population Therefore, the deer population can grow to exceed the natural carrying capacity of its remaining habitats unless checked by man

Without hunting, there would be too many deer for the size of the food supply and many deer would starve and become diseased due to lack of food This is the only way man can right the wrong he did when he upset Nature's balance.

I can't stress the fact enough that hunting, by keeping the deer population at a specific size, will keep the deer herds healthier than if they reproduce unrestricted

I'm an animal lover too, but I also realize that hunting is essential to keep the balance. And besides, every hunter who goes out doesn't get a deer

So next time you want to run off at the mouth Mary try getting the facts straight first!

Mayor not fair

Sir:

I am very upset for two reasons

The city is taking a good portion of Cordova Valley Park for co-op housing, which leaves a huge amount of children unable to have a decent place to play

Now thanks to Mayor Jim Potticary he wants to close down the Oshawa Fair, which a lot of people including our city's senior citizens have been going to for years and look forward to the different events

Who is he to say it's not an agricultural fair? It sure is

If he spent an hour of his precious time, he would see for himself

Also the horse racing, I think, is an outstanding event where people have a chance to see their friends horses race and wager on them

Dehart on safari

Sir:

It is unfortunate for Oshawa that the Chairman of the Oshawa planning board, Alderman Bruce McArthur, cannot given an interview to a newspaper on a plan in front of his board without being viciously attacked by a headline hunter - John DeHart

The public wants information on the McLaughlin Square and Alderman McArthur provided some of the considerations planning board would be looking at before approval is granted

John DeHart has had his own problems in front of the planning board Have the City Fathers protected him from prosecution?

How does Alderman DeHart gain entrance to apartment buildings to solicit insurance business when others are not allowed entry Does he have an "in" with developers?

These questions should be answered if DeHart ever hopes to seek public office again

SPINACH THAT TASTES LIKE POTATO CHIPS

Not too long ago nearly all medicines seemed to taste pretty awful. And just the thought of taking them was unpleasant. But, today advanced developments in flavoring agents have made most medicines taste almost "too good"

Along with the good comes some bad. When children no longer wince and made a bad face at medicine-taking then it creates a special need to be extra careful. More caution must be exercised to keep medicine containers out-of-reach and tightly shut. And, just because it might taste like something good to eat it should never be referred to in that way.

Proposed arterial road levies may be illegal lawyer tells city

The proposed arterial road lot levies may not be legal a spokesman for the Oshawa and District Builders' Association told the works and operations committee Monday.

John Parkinson, a Toronto lawyer presenting the builders' brief against the levy to the committee, said the city may not have the legal right to impose such levies.

According to the Planning Act, Parkinson said the city can concern itself with how the costs of abutting subdivision highways, or highways within a subdivision are paid for, but it could not raise levies against developers on roads out of the bounds of their developments

"I submit, in the absense of proper legal opinion, that gentlemen may be treading on eggs," Parkinson said "The planning act requires that an onus be placed on the minister (of intergovernmental affairs) to determine certain aspects of a properly planned subdivision, but a municipality cannot take on what the minister cannot."

He maintained that the minister, and the city, had a say in locations, widths, names and grades of new highways created by a subdivision, or those that a subdivision abutted, but it couldn't impose levies on a subdivision for roads five miles across the city

"Before you take on this levy imposition I suggest you satisfay yourselves that it is a legal thing to do," he said "I double very much if it is."

In an effort to keep down the debenture debt created by major road construction, the works and operations staff has proposed to the city that it make people who cause that construction—new homebuyer—pay right off the bat with a lot levy

Parkinson also argued on behalf of builders that the lot levy would raise the cost of every home in Oshawa through the law of supply and demand. In other words, because homes are becoming scarcer because of a lack of serviced land, if a new home increased in price so would all other homes because people would be willing to buy them

Parkinson said builders were willing to study the matter with the city in order to come up with a more equitable solution, such as if a developer was building where an arterial road abutted his property, he would have to, pay the costs

The committee will review the matter and make a recommendation to council

J. J. Young, clerk of the executive council of the Ontario government (left) swears in Walter Beath as the chairman of the Durham region.

Beath's day the same despite appointment

The day before his appointment as chairman of the Regional Municipality of Durham, East Whitby farmer Walter Beath was going about his usual business

A meeting in the morning, a cattle buying session in the afternoon, rushing home to tend to his stock of beef cattle and getting things ready to receive a shipment of cattle before hurrying off to a meeting of the Oshawa Fair Board in the evening.

As chairman Beath, 54, doesn't intend to give up his 200-acre farm on Townline Road east of Columbus, but his young son Grant will take on more of the responsibility.

The supermayor has a long and respectable career in municipal life. It started in 1951, the year after the southern portions of East Whitby Township amalgamated with the city of Oshawa, when Beath was elected to the East Whitby Council. Later he served as Reeve and was warden of Ontario County in 1959

He is chairman of the East Whitby Planning Board and the Central Ontario Joint Planning Board. He was the second and last chairman of the Oshawa Area Planning and Development Study and presided unwillingly over its demise in 1971.

Beath is active in a number of agricultural associations and the Oshawa Fair Board.

Oshawa frisbee champs will attend provincial finals

Karen Sauby and Dale Richards throw a mean frisbee

Karen from Southmead Park and Dale from Wildwood Park are the over all girl and boy winners in the second annual Oshawa Open Frisbee championships for kids 12 and under held Monday at Civic Fields

Each of the five city play areas sent their top 10 frisbee artists to the city wide championship.

The Oshawa winners will compete in the Ontario Frisbee Championship at the CNE August 19

A 10-member guts frisbee team from the Woodview Park area will represent the city in this area of competition for the Ontario title

The winners were the over-all point-getters in a series of frisbee events. Competitors were assessed on their ability to throw a frisbee in a straight line, through a rolling hoop and through a hoop suspended in the air 15 feet away

They also had to succeed at tin can bowling - knocking over five cans with the frisbee, at making their frisbee float, and at catching with the left hand, right hand and behind the back.

To prepare for the city-wide and provincial championships, the Oshawa recreation department supplied all play area staff with frisbees and promoted the sport by holding individual competitions at each play area over the past week

Natalie Sabyan of Kingside Park was the runner-up in the girls division, while Ron Abran of Chopin Park came in second in the boys event

McIlveen asks denture bill co-operation

If there is no co operation between denturists and dentists, there will have to be another denturist bill, says Oshawa MPI Dr Charlie McIlveen

McIlveen says he thinks the government made the right decision when it introduced the bill which will, in effect, make qualification examinations mandatory for denturists currently practising

The bill will aslo place any work done by denturists, people who make false teeth under the direct supervision of a dentist

McIlveen says he sees the current role of a denturist as another level of dental service with no advantage to the public

The whole idea of the bill, he says, was not to outlaw denturists practising independently of a dentist, but to place denturists under the supervision of a dentist in order to lower the cost of dentures

"If everyone was to charge what they wanted for dentures," he says, "then the scheme wouldn't work It would go right down the drain. If dentists and denturists don't co-operate then the bill can't succeed There will have to be a new bill and denturists will have to be legalized."

CITY OF OSHAWA

1973 Draft Official Plan

The 1973 Proposed Official Plan will be presented at a public hearing of the Oshawa Planning Board at 7:00 o'clock in the evening on the 8th day of August, 1973, in the Council Chambers, City Hall, Oshawa, Ontario, at which all citizens in the City of Oshawa are invited to appear, either in person or by solicitor or by agent.

This hearing is for the purpose of presenting the 1973 Proposed Official Plan to interested individuals and groups; and briefs and submissions on the plan will be invited from such interested parties and considered at a subsequent hearing of the Planning Board on the 15th day of August, 1973 at 7:00 o'clock in the evening, in the Council Chambers, City Hall, Oshawa, Ontario.

All material relevant to the subject plan is open for public inspection during regular office hours (8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.) in the office of the Planning Division, Department of Planning & Development, 7th Floor, Rundle Tower, City Hall, Oshawa, Ontario.

PURPOSE OF THE PLAN

On July 13, 1970, the Council of the City of Oshawa repealed the existing Official Plan for the Oshawa Planning Area (approved on December 6th, 1949) and adopted a new Official Plan for the Planning Area. Over the past three years, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and subsequently the Treasurer of Ontario and Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs have withheld approval of the 1970 Official Plan pending the establishment of regional development guidelines and a regional government structure in this area. With these established the City of Oshawa has updated and altered the 1970 Proposed Official Plan and intends to submit the revised plan to the Treasurer of Ontario and Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs for approval prior to the implementation of regional government in this area.

Several public hearings were held as part of the process of formulating the 1970 Proposed Official Plan in order to solicit the input of citizens. Since the 1970 Proposed Official Plan has been somewhat revised, the Oshawa Planning Board wishes to involve citizens in an evaluation of a draft of the 1973 Proposed Official Plan.

Update Planning Guidelines

The potential 90,000 population projected for the development area established in the 1949 Official Plan has been surpassed and the plan has been rendered obsolete by the substantial changes in the life styles and activity systems of urban residents and the changes in development form and structure. Therefore an updated concept for the future development and redevelopment of the City must be arrived at, and planning guidelines and policies formulated to effectuate the desired urban environment.

Interim Planning Document

The revision and reformulation of the 1949 Official Plan has been based on a twenty-year planning period; however, it is recognized that the plan will serve as an interim comprehensive planning document pending the completion of the regional plan in 1976 for the Regional Municipality of Durham and the reformulation of a comprehensive plan for the Area Municipality of Oshawa. This plan is essential for effective and efficient planning administration; it provides a basis for Capital Budgets and Programs, secondary plans, Zoning By-Law Amendments, and Minimum Maintenance and Occupancy By-Laws.

Upon approval by the Treasurer of Ontario, Minister of Economics and Intergovernmental Affairs, or the Ontario Municipal Board, as the case may be, this Official Plan shall be deemed to supersede, in all respects, the present Official Plan dated December 6, 1949 including any amendments thereto, insofar as that plan affects the area covered by this Official Plan.

Any amendment to this Official Plan shall be made in accordance with the procedures set out in the Planning Act (R.S.O. 1970, Chapter 349, as amended).

ELEMENTS OF THE PLAN

(a) the articulation of planning goals and objectives that reflect the values of the citizens of Oshawa, and the intent and purpose of the policies;

(b) the designation of major land use areas to ensure the proper functioning of uses, and a desirable spatial distribution and relationship of development based on sound planning principles and thorough studies and analyses;

(c) the establishment of a street system to adequately serve areas of existing and future development;

(d) the establishment of the general pattern and staging of sewer and water services to promote economical, efficient, orderly and contingous development;

(e) the articulation of standards for the provision of public open space;

(f) the delineation of a planning unit hierarchy of neighbourhoods and communities to serve as a framework for the formulation of secondary plans, effective citizen participation in planning, and the provision of community facilities;

(g) the establishment of a basis for the formulation of secondary plans which will show the type, density, and relationship of land uses at the neighbourhood scale, the location of social and recreational facilities, and the major road and service infrastructure;

(h) the clear articulation of the general policies of the City with regard to land use planning and development, and the provision of roads, services, and facilities; and,

(i) a general indication of the priority and allocation of public funds for the provision of roads, underground services, open space and recreational facilities, social service facilities, and improvement of properties and neighbourhoods.

BASIS OF THE PLAN ..... GOALS AND OBJECTIVES

The inclusion of goals and objectives in the plan has been done to convey the general intent and purpose of the policies contained in the plan.

Goal: Land Use Structure

1. An orderly form of urban development in which land uses of various types are properly located, compatibly interrelated; and thatmaximizes the efficiency of the transportation and servicing systems.

1. 1 Objective: Form and Structure.
- a location and overall distribution of land uses in which the type, scale, intensity, and staging of development in various areas reflects the economic and social role that such areas should assume in the urban and regional socio-economic system, and is consistent with the development of an efficient system of roads, services, utilities, and community facilities at the urban and regional scale.

1. 2 Objective: Land Use Relationships.
- a compatable physical and functional relationship among the various land uses in which residential land uses are protected from the adverse effects of non-residential land uses, and non-residential land uses are permitted to function in an efficient manner.

1. 3 Objective: Accessibility
- a location and distribution of the various land uses that minimizes the time-distance of population movement between residential areas and places of employment, shopping, education, and recreation.

1. 4 Objective: Functional Design.
- the development of public and private vehicular and pedestrian areas that maximizes the efficiency of the transportation system and minimizes vehicular-vehicular, and vehicular-pedestrian conflicts.

Goal: Socio-Economic Structure

2. To effectuate a socio-economic structure that maximizes the opportunity for all individuals, businesses, and industries to realize their full economic potential, and maximizes opportunities for social interaction and involvement in civic affairs.

2. 1 Objective: Social Structure.
- each individual and household having adequate shelter, the maximum choice of housing type and location, access to adequate community facilities, and the maximum opportunity to participate in public decision-making at the neighbourhood, City, and regional levels.

2. 2 Objective: Economic Structure
- the opportunity for a variety of businesses and industries to establish long-term viable operations, diversity and strenghten the economic base of the City and region, thereby maximizing the opportunity for individuals to obtain gainful employment and to have access to high quality services.

Goal : Urban Environment

3. The realization of an overall urban development pattern that is in harmony with the natural environment, is aesthetically attractive, and reflects historical continuity.

3. 1 Objective: Ecology.
- the development and operation of land uses in such a manner that minimizes adverse effects on natural resources, the landscape, air, and water and ensures the safety of residents from flooding and other natural hazards.

3. 2 Objective: Aesthetics
- the conservation, rehabilitation, and development of structures and outdoor areas of high architectural quality.

INTERPRETATION OF THE PLAN

It is intended that deviations from the policies advanced in the text and Schedules comprising the plan will require an Official Plan Amendment.

In order to provide for flexibility in the interpretation of the text and maps of this Plan, it is intended that all figures, numbers and quantities shown in the Plan be considered to be approximate only and not absolute, and that minor changes will be permitted without amendments to this Plan, provided that they do not affect the intent of this Plan. Similarly, minor variations from the staging and other policies will not require amendments to this Plan, provided that the general intent of the Plan is preserved.

Schedule "A", Land Use, is a map that shows the general location and distribution of major land use designations in the City. Boundaries and alignments are approximate and designed to convey the relationship between different elements. Secondary plans will establish in greater detail the locations, density, and land use relationship relative to streets and other major physical features.

In secondary plans, boundary adjustments crossing major roads, railways, H.E.P.C. rights-of-way or other major physical features require an amendment of the Official Plan.

The uses indicated are the predominant ones for the areas shown. Small areas are not shown, e.g. local parks in residential areas or small pockets of industry and commercial uses among housing.

Secondary plans shall be formulated and adopted by Council and be subject to the review and approval of the Minister as Amendments to the Official Plan. Such secondary plans shall:

(i) show the type, density (or intensity) and specific location of residential, commercial, and industrial uses, related to the availability and capacity of municipal services;
(ii) indicate types and location of education and recreation facilities;
(iii) differentiate those public open space and recreation areas that are hazard lands and those that are suitable for intensive recreational developments; and
(iv) indicate the location of arterial and collector streets.

DEFINITION OF LAND USE DESIGNATIONS

Schedule "A", Land Use, is a map that shows the general location and distribution of major land use designations in the City. Boundaries and alignments are approximate and designed to convey the relationship between different land uses. The various land use designations shown on Schedule "A" are defined as follows:

Residential:

The residential land use designation as indicated on Schedule "A" is for areas in which residential dwellings shall be the predominant use. The following land uses may be permitted in designated residential areas, subject to City policies: education , community, and religious land uses that are by nature of their scale and design compatible with residential uses; open space and recreation uses having a community or neighbourhood scale service area; convenience commercial uses incorporate into and intended to exclusively serve a planned residential unit development.

Commercial:

The Commercial land use designation as shown on Schedule "A" includes areas predominantly used for retail, and wholesale stores, office and service functions, restaurants, clinics, cultural and entertainment facilities. Service stations, car washes, and wholesale warehousing may be permitted only by specific amendments to the zoning by-law. Mulitple residential dwellings may be permitted as an integral part of a commercial use only by specific amendments to the zoning by-law.

Industrial:

The industrial land use designation delineated on Schedule "A" includes areas predominantly used for manufacturing, warehousing and storage, service industries, and sales and service operations ancillary to these uses; utility functions, and road, rail, and water terminals.

In addition, commercial, recreational, and institutional uses serving an industrial area may be permitted by specific amendments to the zoning by-law without amending the Official Plan.

Institutional Uses:

The Institutional land use designation as shown on Schedule "A" includes areas predominantly used for large public institutional establishments under the jurisdiction of the Governments of Canada, the Province of Ontario and the City of Oshawa, including administrative offices, major education facilities, hospitals, and major emergency service functions; and shall also include private and/or religious institutions.

Public Open Space and Recreation:

The use of land designated "Public Open Space and Recreation" shall be for active and passive outdoor recreation facilities of City-wide and regional significance. The "Public Open Space and Recreation" designation shall also include all lands having inherent environmental characteristics that are hazardous for urban development, including poor drainage, organic soils, flood susceptibility, erosion, steep slopes, etc., and lands that are considered to have unique biological and/or botanical significance in the ecology of the City.

Private Open Space:

The "Private Open Space" designation includes lands under private ownership which are used for recreational purposes, such as golf courses, country clubs, riding academies, commerical parks, exhibition and show places and associated uses. Also included are cemeteries, mausolea, columbaria and crematoria as classified under the Cemeteries Act.

Airport:

The lands designated "Airport" on Schedule "A" includes Oshawa Airport and may also include compatible industrial uses and uses that provide a service to aircraft.

Special Study Area:

The lands designated "Special Study Area" on Schedule "A" are located north and west of the "Airport" designation, and contain those areas which the highest and best use is strongly determined by either the continuing existence or relocation of the Oshawa Airport.

Zero population growth is the answer to a major problem

By Janet Wilson

Geometrical progression A term which bluntly states that a baby does not add to the population, but rather helps it to multiply

It is sobering to think that our present population is doubling at a fantastic rate of once every 50 years. There is really no way of avoiding the fact that by the year 2000 there will probably be seven billion people living (or sub-existing) on earth.

Some people may take a procrastinators' delight in the word "probably", but the only way to disprove this figure is to plan widespread plagues, pestillences and wars in the next 27 years, to do away with a good deal of the excess population

And even at this, the figure of seven billion is an optimistic generalization, for if controls are not practised soon, the figure will be much higher

Even now, the future grows dimmer with each child, wanted or unwanted, that is born. Seven billion people, on a planet that is not adequately feeding its present 3 5 billion

In some areas there are open signs of starvation, while cases of malnutrition are constantly being reported in our own affluent western world

In many countries, food imports exceed exports in order to meet with demands, while arable land is being depleted of its fertility due to erosion from mass land clearance, soil exhaustion and chemical overkill

Scientists enthused about prospects of "farming the sea" are becoming disillusioned by the defilement which reaches waters far from any form of civilization

Paul Ehrlich author of a noted book on the subject, "The Population Bomb", sees imminent problems to the point of major nations carrying on "food wars", in order to feed their own billions.

It is a hideous picture fit only for science fiction, billions of doomed men and women slowly drowning in their own refuse, attacking other, weaker countries and eventually their neighbors in their hysterical determination to escape a long and painful death

We are building for our sucessors a world with no dignity or conscience. In a society of crowded, unhappy people, existing on a day-to-day basis, such emotions would be worthless, impossible to develop, in the fight for survival

If we continue on our chosen path, the future world will be a condemned world It will be one without privacy, with no idea of leisure or affluence

It will either necessitate strict controls and multifold laws or allow rampant crime. A world of people with nohopefor the present and no care for the future

And the seven billion? I repeat, it is an optimistic figure based on the hope that each family will produce two offspring only one to replace each parent The phrase "there is no time like the present" was never more true. Let us do now what should have been started at the turn of the century

If we don't do something about the birthrate, life could become this crowded.

Birth control should be in the open

As we are becoming more free in our ideas and morals, I think it's time we started to become open about birth control.

It's time we faced up to it, so here I go --Mary the Mouth strikes again!

A lot of people become tense and quiet when someone even mentions birth control. Now that is ridiculous. I feel that if we talk more and rid ourselves of old wives' tales there would be less unwanted pregnancies and a healthier open society.

We know that there is premarital sex; so instead of pretending it's not there we should accept it

As you know there are several forms of birth control, abortion and sterilization being the two drastic types

There are oral contraceptives: "the pill", "the morning after pill" etc They are effective yet controversial as there is a great possibility of side effects or allergic reactions The effectiveness in preventing pregnancy is just about 100 per cent.

There are the intrauterine devices, IUD. They will sometimes cause abnormal bleeding and discomfort. Several variations have been produced, some though are less capable in preventing conception.

The diaphragm and cervical cap are two other methods that have been tested as being good. There are more types of birth control

Information on these can be found at your doctor's or a family planning service The male can use the condom or sheath or resort to vasectomy or male sterilization; both are quite popular. The latter is recommended for those who wish not to have any or any more children.

Most contraceptives can be obtained from a qualified physician, and some are even sold on the open market I think it would be best if it were easier to obtain the contraceptives.

Open birth control clinics with low charge or free of charge would be a great asset. Welfare and low income families would not have to suffer the unwanted child if it were made possible to get advice and free birth control

The ideal situation is to have a clinic with a staff of doctors or several gynecologists sponsored by the local hospital and government

People could come in for guidance on family planning, veneral disease, abortion, birth control , etc

There should be special clinics for teenagers and unwed mothers where they can acquire the attention they need

They shouldn't be denied the right to birth control just because some old biddy is full of Victorian ideas that should have been thrown out at the turn of the century

It is better to have the young woman protected by contraceptives than to have it necessary that she have an abortion.

By taking such precautionary measures we will cut down on the number of children that are born only to be put up for adoption

Also it will eliminate children that otherwise would have been abandoned or aborted

How to fend off hiking masher

By Janet Wilson

Rape is not funny, but there is also no use getting paranoid about it

If you keep your head and are reasonably strong and quick on your feet, there is a good chance you will be able to resist your attacker

One of the most publicized dangers is hitchhiking Of course, it is always best to have company when you are going by thumb, but what happens in an extreme instance, such as a car breakdown in a strange place, or the subtle absence of petrol?

First of all, you do not have to get into any car; if you do not like the look of the ride, turn it down. It is a good idea to ask where the ride is headed before they can ask you, for it gives you a chance to back out gracefully

Besides, if the driver says Anywhere you are sweetie" but doesn't strike you as the obliging type, you can take your chances and assemble a few odds and ends

For example, a burning cigarette puts many a gratification-seeker off; and you cankeep a sharp-toothed comb in your pocket, or even flash your nails if they seem menacing enough

Be careful of nail files or scissors and the like, for if your attacker turns out to be a Famous Well-Insured Hollywood Movie Star, you could be charged with concealing a dangerous weapon, and it could be bad

If it develops into a real struggle, you can hurt a person very badly by stiff-arming (wo knuckles into his windpipe. I do not recommend this sort of thing, because things could get vicious (violence begets violence) and you certainly won't make any friends, aside from latent masochists

Don't overdo you suspicions. Refrain from casually cleaning your teeth with your stiletto, or you will probably find yourself back on that lonely road with no gas

The best defence, if you are the non-blatent type, is to be a lady. Pull your skirt as far as it will go to your knees, keep your feet off the dashboard, back straight, and be polite

Develop and practise a look of cool collectiveness This seems foolproof to me, but if your particular nuisance likes the Madonna type, by all means tell him that you are dosed, or pregnant or have some terrible habit

The object is to get out of the car in one piece, isn't it? Swallow your pride

Of course, there are times where it is not enough to be a lady I once heard of a woman who became so angry when a man in a car followed her for seven blocks, that she kicked in his headlights and broke off his aerial

If you feel justified in outright attack, indulge (Just don't quote me when it turns out to be that unmarked police car that's had you under surveillance for some time.)

But better safe than sorry, even if the man makes you pay his hospitalization bills and the police do arrest you for damaging public property.

A rape case is something no right thinking person would enjoy getting into The Criminal Code definition of rape is fuzzy and laws vary (In some parts of the States, a witness is required, sometimes they ask for bruises, just to make sure you put up a struggle, and in places the law has it that it is impossible for a man to rape his wife.) Often the woman is prevented from testifying, though she can identify the man, by shame or parental pressure

In court she will probably be degraded ("nice girls don't get raped") and the defending lawyer is paid to dig up her past, to prove promiscuity and lack of moral character

Sometimes, the attitude is actually taken that the woman incited the attack there her normal manner of dress will be brought into it) and even a person with a soul and past as pure as ivory snow will end with a new low in their self-concept

What begins as a quest for justice becomes a public expose of the woman who tried to press the charge

I feel the problem comes of our male-oriented society, but that is of little consequence The thing is when you are in a position like this, you are not in the power position

Oshawa businessmen help us please

Our company is experiencing financial difficulties as a result of either the lack of information on our program available to the public or the misinterpretation of the information already released on our company.

Confusion has resulted over monies alloted by the government. OYSE Provincial has loaned us the amount of $375 for capitalization to start operations.

The loan has to be repaid and as of yet has not. In addition our enterprise must pay 'This Week' a fee for the publication of a page each week.

False alarms are a foolish joke that could backfire

By Garnet Cowsill
Staff Writer
Second of a series

OTTAWA (1964) - Three people died as fire engulfed an 8-year-old, 12-storey apartment building here today

MONTREAL (1969) Fire ran rampant killing six persons in a three-storey apartment building this morning

QUEBEC CITY (1971)) Four persons are dead and 17 are injured as fire completely destroyed a four-storey apartment complex

After a year-long study of high rise apartment fires, the Ontario Fire Marshall's Office reports: "occupants (of high rise buildings) ignore fire alarms because of the number of false alarms."

"There is no psychological guilt feelings when a person pulls a fire alarm falsely because that person thinks he is just pulling that alarm as a joke on his neighbors," says Ald George Drynan. "As long a as mischievous individuals play tricks on their neighbors and the proper authorities do not become aware of it, it will continue."

There is no liability on a person for not reporting false alarms, and so fire officials says, a large majority of the false alarms are not reported to the fire and police departments

"Some high rise buildings get so many false alarms that the superintendents just shut off the alarm system so that there's no protection at all," says Bob Sledziewski, city fire prevention officer Tenants in other buildings get so many false alarms that they become apathetic and being to ignore them, even though they may be the real thing."

Legislators have recognized the problem as well There has recently been a stiffer penalty imposed under the Criminal Code for anyone convicted of pulling a false alarm

"Everyone who wilfully, without reasonable cause, by outcry, ringing bells, using a fire alarm, telephone or telegraph, or in any other manner makes or circulates or causes to be made or circulated an alarm of fire is guilty of an indictable offense and is liable to imprisonment for two years'

Two years in prison for "a joke on your neighbors"

The problem is," says Oshawa Police Lieutenant Dave Edwards, "that apprehension and charges are few and far between You almost have to have an eyewitness."

Drynan maintains that if all the false alarms were reported and investigated, it might create a little less security for the person who derives pleasure by putting other people in danger

"The greatest percentage of offenders are juveniles and of course the cases can't be put in the paper nor the convictions publicized," Edwards says

Drynan sees that as one of the problems

The secrecy aspect (of the juvenile court system) he says, works both ways. "Joe's had it. He's been caught pulling a false alarm. The only problem is that Joe's young friends don't know what Joe got and they in turn might be tempted to do the same thing"

"Most juveniles get a reprimand and a suspended sentence as a conviction for a false alarm" Sledziewski says. "That's really not much of a deterrent, is it?

Drynan agrees

"Other juveniles don't know what the consequences are when their pals are convicted for pulling a false alarm," he says. "A big fuss everytime would likely have an effect on the frequency. Most juveniles would probably stay in the vicinity to watch the excitement But if a police cruiser was to pull up everytime, it might take some of the fun out of it"

Although 70 per cent of the false alarms that were reported resulted in convictions last year, the number of alarms that are reported compared with the number that actually take place are suspected to be extremely small

"Ten chances to one that the person who pulls a false alarm in a high rise building lives in the same building," says Edwards "The biggest problem is having it reported to us quickly enough so we can do something about it."

Drynan proposes some sort of legislation that would make it mandatory for the management, or the persons responsible, in a high rise building be faced with the responsibility of reporting any and all fire alarms, and if they don't, they be held liable to the courts

The major hazard of a false alarm, fire officials say, is that if it happens too frequently, people begin to ignore the alarm system In the event of a real fire they would not know there was one and they could be trapped and killed by fire

"It is also dangerous," says Sledziewski, "because there could be another fire happening somewhere also while we are attending a false alarm. We could easily spend a half hour checking for a fire that wasn't there and be depriving other people of our protection

If you hear a fire alarm, phone the fire department," he advises "If it is false, we will report it to police and they will send a cruiser"

Don't wait to find out if it is real or false. The moment you hear an alarm, phone the fire department at 725-6574. Helping to apprehend someone who enjoys pulling a false alarm may one day save your life

Women's lib paper girl does well as boy

Donny Osmond, Mayor Jim Potticary and the kids of today are alright.

These are opinions of Cathy Weaver, 9-year-old carrier with This Week who says the mayor is "running a pretty good city," likes Donny Osmond records and thinks the children of her generation are as well behaved as "old people"

Cathy first got into newspaper work when she took over deliveries for her 15 year-old brother two months ago. Now, the only member of her family still in the newspaper business, she is saving the money she makes as a carrier to go the CNE later this month

The hardest work of my job is the collections," she says, "but I like my job. I's fun and I like meeting people They give me tips sometimes."

Although the largest tip so far has been 15 cents Cathy faithfully adds it to her "exhibition fund where, she says, she is looking forward to going on the "hurricane" ride

"I like it when my customers talk to me," she says "They say things like 'Hello' and 'You're a paper girl, not a paperboy'"

Cathy says she agrees with women's lib and says "I think papergirls do just as good a job as paperboys."

Working as a carrier for This Week is Cathy's first job but she hopes to become an airline stewardess when she grows up.

I don't worry about hijackers and I would really like to go to Florida

Cathy will be going into grade four next fall at Wonderest Public School where she earned all A and Bs on her last report car and where she modestly says that she's 'one of the best in the class

My hardest subject is math and the easiest one is reading," she says "I read stories like Tom Sawyer and the newspaper

Wednesdays are her delivery days for This Week so Cathy makes her collections on the other days of the week

The secret of her success as a carrier she says is careful delivery of the papers, the same hard work that earns her good marks in school and "going back for the collections when people aren't home

When she isn't working, Cathy swims and plays baseball and visits a cottage in Haliburton with her family

Rainy days are the worst for paperboys and papergirls alike, but after the deliveries and collecting is done, Cathy gets the chance to read.

"I would like to see a story on Donny Osmond in the paper though," she says with a hinting tone in her voice

McLaughlin Square presses for early council approval

The McLaughlin Square development will re-establish Oshawa as the centre of the new region, says planning board Chairman Ald. Bruce McArthur

McArthur made the statement at a press conference Friday when details of the new development were unveiled by the developers, Tobercurry Investments Limited, Toronto.

The development, to take place at the General Motors West Plant on the city block bordered by Ontario, William, Mary and Richmond Streets, will combine a first floor commerce section for retail outlets with two or three parking garages layered on top

On top of that will be three towers for apartment suites, a hotel, and office space

When completed, the development will lodge 518 apartment units, some especially designed for senior citizens and the handicapped, 113,000 square feet of retail space and 200,000 square feet of mixed office-hotel space

The tallest of the three towers will rise 29 to 30 storeys from ground level and 26 storeys above the ground-level mall. The roof of the top parking level will be landscaped to create a park-type atmosphere between the three towers, two of which will be apartment buildings

A press release by the developers says that construction will begin on the first apartment tower and the retail and parking levels in early 1974

Dennis Southerland, of Tobercurry Investments, says he anticipates construction starting in early spring of nextyeanf all goes well with the public hearings that are to be held to gain public input into the plan, and with the subdivision plan approval by the various government agencies

In early 1976 construction of the second apartment tower and the office-hotel will commence. The total development time is projected at seven years to completion after construction begins

According to the press release, the development has a projected life of 80 years and over this period it will yield a minimum $110,000,00 in property tax revenue to the city

The project willcreate permanent employment for a minimum 350 jobs, and, in addition, there will be several times as many new jobs created during construction

"The underlying concept behind our development plan is a mixed-use, or 'city-within-a-city' concept," the release says "Restricting a large project to a single-use development is now viewed by many cities as a mistake and there is a definite trend toward mixed use developments in progressive cities throughout North America.

"The mixed-use kind of development allows one to take very expensive land and develop it to a high density but at the same time spread the density or concentration of people over a 24-hour period so that at any one time only a portion of the people occupying the site is present"

The development calls for an allocation of 100 one-bedroom apartments designed for senior citizens and the handicapped A market survey by the developer shows there is virtually no senior citizen accommodation in the downtown area

"Creation of a city within a city can provide exciting opportunities to integrate people and uses," the release says, "For example, the senior citizens in our development can act as baby sitters in a day-care or night-care centre for people who work in the office-hotel or retail shops as well as for children of retail shoppers

The integration provides not only a service to parents, the developer maintains, but it also indicates a need and purpose for the senior citizens, giving them a valuable function to perform

Southerland says there is agreement from all parties concerned, downtown merchants General Motors, and the city, that there is a need to redevelop the downtown core

He says Tobercurry has already entered into negotiations with several retailers who are interested in renting space in the proposed complex, including two major food chain stores, and already 57,000 square feet of space have been verbally committed

Although there has been some discussion regarding who will pay for the massive servicing to the new delopment, Southerland says a formula has not yet been set

Con. Christine Thomas, who attended the meeting, says the servicing costs will be substantial, and the city is obligated to share those costs

"A little bit of trust is in the best interest of the city and all those surrounding the project," McArthur says

Southerland says the planning process will examine the effect of every aspect of the project on schools, traffic and the residential area in the surrounding district

In terms of our impact on the area," he says, "in the east there is industry and on the south there is industry which we will not bother in the least. In the west there is a lumber yard and transitional kinds of buildings which have probably had their property values increased because of the project On the north there are four blocks of housing and the value of their homes went up on the date of our announcement

Although he could not give a price range for the apartment suites, which he terms semi-luxurious with broadloom and air-conditioning", Southerland says the rents will be competitive with other apartments in the city. He adds that inflation will have an effect on those rents during construction, but he hopes they will be in the moderate price range,

Because there will be senior citizens and handicapped people living in the apartment units, the towers will be equipped with "updated fire protection and detection equipment" such as a centralized fire detection mechanism that will be manned 24 hours a day and a public address system that goes on in every apartment telling residents to evacuate in case of fire

Southerland projects the population living and working in the complex to be close to 1,500 people

"There is nothing in our current region that can attempt to come to this size (of a project)," McArthur says, "It will re-establish Oshawa as the hub of the region The developers have identified this city as the centre of it. I personally rate this project A1-plus Southerland describes this development as a new beginning for Oshawa.

It's like a snowball,' he says "Once it gets started it will get bigger and bigger All that was needed in your downtown redevelopment was a process to start

After public hearings and planning input to the project, McArthur says, according to the current schedule, a recommendation to allow or disallow the project will be made to council by the planning board Oct 3, two days after the regional government elections

Southerland says he would like to see some of the meetings brought up so the decision can be made before the election. McArthur admits that council can alter the timetable to do so

The priorities and responsibilities of current councillors will be altered drastically after the election," he says, "It could be a lame-duck council depending on individual responsibilities. It's unfortunate the developer has been placed in this Pandora's box"

Now listen here, Spike this is what I want you to do, Alderman Bruce McArthur (left) seems to be saying to Mayor Jim Potticary as they discuss plans for a softball game against the staff of This Week August 14 at Alexandra Park.

Whitby actress chosen for CBC production

A member of the Whitby Theatre Company has been chosen to appear in a CBC drama workshop production late this fall

Jo Haviland will appear at the Herongate Barn Theatre in Locust Hill in November as a member of the cast of A Shot In The Dark

Mrs Haviland and her husband Blair, WTC president, performed The Four Poster every weekend during July at Herongate It was her portrayel of Agnes in this production that resulted in her selection for the CBC workshop presentation

The Four Poster was directed by one of the WTC's founding members, Peter Evanchuk, and backstage work was done primarily by a number of young people who belong to the theatre group

Herongate is an excellent place to put on a production," says the WTC president. "The theatre is an intimate one and for the price of admission, guests are treated to dinner

'In the summer, they can swim and of course full bar facilities are available But most important, they can meet the cast and crew of a play and find out more about the particular group's future activities For a new organization, this is wonderful publicity

The Whitby group will be presenting The Four Poster as its first production in the fall and has already been invited back to Herongate next year

Plans are not complete but the group hopes to present a three-act comedy called Beekman Place

Autofest shaping up as a bigger and better event than last year's

Gambling, and the Pig and Whistle on wheels

All part of the second annual Autofest, this time bigger, better and longer, from September 15-23

City denturists would rather fight than switch

By Garnet Cowsill
Staff Writer

Anytime during September Edward Dunn and Peter Barker can expect to be raided by the police

No, neither man is involved in narcotics, bootlegging or running a gambling or prostitution house They make dentures

As a matter of fact, Dunn and Barker are partners running the Oshawa Denture Clinic and if they continue to run it after September they could face six-month prison terms or fines up to $2,000, or both

Under new provincial legislation, Bill 246, any person previously practising or wanting to practise "denture therapy", a new health discipline created by the bill, must first submit to both a practical and written examination under supervision of a licensing board set up under the bill.

If they qualify for a licence after completing the exams successfully, they cannot practise unless they are under the direct supervision of a dentist

Dunn and Barker refuse to do either

"We won't be closing down the shop," says Barker "We'd be only too willing to take the exams provided that we didn't have to be under the supervision of a dentist. We are very anxious to prove our qualifications, but we're not going to bow down to something that's going to squash us."

Both determined

Both men are determined The last chance to register to take the exams is this week, but both say they will not register

Although the legislation was proclaimed July 26, Health Minister Dr. Richard Potter has made it quite clear he will not invoke sections of the bill, that technically make it illegal for any denturist to operate now unless he has taken the test and is under medical supervision, until after the last exam in September

Both men are quite aware that after the deadline they could be raided by police. Both say they are determined to keep their denture clinic open until precisely such a thing occurs

As they see it, the legislation went too far It has made provisions, they say, that other provinces in Canada did not think were necessary

It has, for instance, put denturists under direct supervision of a dentist. They cannot solicit patients or bill them. They must turn away patients unless they go to a dentist first, and they cannot operate in any way, shape or form independently

In other provinces, a patient wishing false teeth must first see a dentist for what Dunn and Barker term "a clean bill of oral health". But after that, he can go to any denture clinic he wishes to get false teeth

Request refused

Such a recommendation was made by the Denturist Association of Ontario to the minister, they say, but it was turned down

The minster, they say, also received thousands of petitioned signatures from denturists' patients saying they thought the legislation was harsh, yet still the bill was proclaimed

At standing committee meetings which reviewed the legislation, 1,500 people from all over the province showed up at Queen's Park in support of the denturists' position. But still the bill was passed

Why?

"High pressure lobbying from the dental association," says Barker. "There could be absolutely no other reason whatsoever."

Denturist Edward Dunn says he'll go to jail rather than comply with provincial regulations.

If they were to take the test, they maintain, since they wouldn't be able to operate independent of a dentist, they would have to close up shop and sit home waiting for a dentist to call them to fit and make someone's false teeth

But, they ask, which dentist in his right mind would call them when all dentists are qualified to make a person's dentures themselves and collect the money for the service afterwards?

Serviced thousands

"We've been open here for 2½ years and during that time we must have serviced thousands of patients," Dunn says. "But under the bill we can have no vested interest in a commercial clinic. We'll have to sit at home and wait for the phone to ring."

"The only work we would be able to do under the bill is work started in a dentist's office," adds Barker. "The dentist has to stand and watch. The bill has successfully eliminated us from the face of the earth."

Both men have graduated from a college course in denture technology-Barker says he spent six years in a college in England and holds a certificate in denture technology from the City and Guilds of London

They claim to be able to produce dentures at half the price of an average dentist They charge $25 to reline a plate, $150 to $200 for a complete set of dentures, plus a set rate of $125 for pensioners wanting false teeth With the service comes a 12-month guarantee on the dentures

One of the reasons the bill was introduced was so that low-cost dentures, $180 per set, could be introduced to the general public

Called sub-standard

Barker maintains that the clinic ran a survey in Oshawa and people who enquired about getting low-cost dentures were told by dentists that the $180 dentures were "substandard and it would be better if they paid for the higher class set of dentures."

Other aspects of the bill bother Dunn and Barker as well. For instance, even though a qualified denture therapist can only work with a patient in a dentist's office under the direct supervision of the dentist, their work is held liable to a malpractice suit for two years. The dentist is liable for only six months

The men argue that it is not their patient they are working on, it's the dentist's. All the work must be approved by the dentist so why is the dentist let off the hook when it comes to malpractice?

"On top of that, no one has said how much we'll be paid, we can't solicit patients and we can't bill them," says Dunn

"It's a perfect form of slavery," Barker adds. "A dentist has been trained to look after a person's teeth A person who has dentures doesn't relly need a dentist We've been trained to do the rest."

Neither man believes there is an easy solution to their dilemma, nor do they believe the government will review the legislation and make amendments

I don't think this minister will change the bill, says Barker. "But I'm going to be here a lot longer than he is and I'll wait for a new, more progressive minister, that's all"

Filming of the CBC production of Pierre Berton's The Last Spike took place at Parkwood recently

Potter's diagnosis for one problem is a bitter pill for some people to take

By Linda Sutton
Staff Writer

Dr. Richard Potter has a health problem.

The Ontario Health Minister has been charged with changing everyone's ideas about health care.

The ministry has embarked on a new approach to health care, de-emphasizing hospital treatment for everything and stressing a wide variety of other kinds of health care facilities - nursing homes, home care programs, outpatient clinics - as well as the use of paramedics.

Because of substantial federal grants towards the construction and operation of hospitals, Ontario had convinced the population that hospital treatment is the best kind. Now, says Potter, we have to turn around and convince people not to go to hospitals if they can get adequate or better care at some other health care facility.

It's a credibility problem," he says, "even though we thoroughly support the broadening and integration of health care facilities."

Potter likens his problem to another credibility gap he experienced in the army.

When he first joined during the Second World War, he was assigned to an anti-tank regiment and trained in the use of bazookas.

"We were told not to be afraid of tanks, to just stand our ground until the tank was within range and we could wipe it out," he says.

But before his regiment was moved out, it was changed to a tank regiment and the instructors had to convince the soldiers that bazookas were useless against tanks.

One of the major motivating factors in the switch in emphasis results from the rapidly escalating costs of operating hospitals.

Those patients who do not require attention in active treatment hospitals such as the one pictured above are being transferred to nursing homes or are receiving home care under a new policy instituted by the ministry of health.

"We've developed the most expensive hospital care in the world with the help of Ottawa's cost-sharing program," says Potter.

And even then, he says, Ontario is not getting an even break with the rest of the provinces.

The federal government says that it pays 50 per cent of the cost of building and operating hospitals but Ontario only receives 47 per cent of the operating costs and 43 per cent of the cost of active treatment and chronic beds, says the Health Minister. Ottawa pays nothing towards psychiatric beds or any other health program.

The result is that the federal government really only pays 36.7 per cent of the cost of operating Ontario hospitals.

That's $260 million a year we're not getting," says Potter.

So far Queen's Park has been unsuccessful in convincing the federal government to extend the cost-sharing program to other areas of health care, although in fact these alternatives are saving the federal government money.

Nevertheless says Potter, Ontario is finding it less expensive to pay 100 per cent of the cost on a wide variety of programs than to continue to build and operate active treatment beds with federal subsidies.

This year the government is spending more than $1 billion in hospital services and the cost continues to rise.

To offset the increasing expense, the health ministry has told hospitals to find alternatives to the most expensive way of treating sick people.

Forty or 50 years ago, people were used to being treated at home, says Potter, a GP from Belleville who says he practised in the days of no medical insurance, private medical insurance and now government medical insurance.

For the last 35 or 40 years, he says, people have been educated that the hospital is the place for sick people to go.

Now it is pretty difficult to convince people to reverse this disposition, but patients can be treated at home if the needed services are provided.

With the introduction of private medical insurance, he says, people began to use the medical facilities available to a greater extent. This trend has increased with the onset of a government-operated medicare program.

"A lot of people have the idea that if they have insurance they might as well use it," says Potter. Before insurance was introduced people didn't come to see me unless they were pretty sick.

OHIP payments put about $500 million in government coffers annually. Potter favors the premium system over raising the money through taxes.

Psychologically, the payment of premiums makes people aware that they are getting something for their money, he says. In addition, the taxes would be levied against the same people who are now paying the bulk of the premiums.

Besides," says Potter, "I don't believe that any one is prepared to take the tax increase.

The district health councils the ministry is in the process of establishing across the province will also acquaint more people with the true cost of health care and provide for substantial local input into health care decisions for an area.

The ministry is leaving the actual geographic areas largely to local decisions with the guideline that a health council should serve roughly 200,000 people. Health council jurisdictions may, but don't have to coincide with regional government boundaries," says Potter.

While he is convinced of the value of local input into health care decisions, Potter opposes too close ties to a regional council. They are separate areas of decision-making," he says, and health care decisions should not be thrown into the pot with financial decisions to build roads and another arena.

Instead the district health council should be composed of representatives of health agencies and representatives of the public along with a couple of representatives from the regional council.

"As a former alderman and mayor (of Belleville)," says Potter, I know that in the past there has been a tendency for councils to appoint people to the board of health or hospital boards who have no particular interest. These appointees never contribute much. I'd be very reluctant to have this kind of thing happen to district health councils.

The district health councils will coordinate the services the various health care agencies offer and will be able to make recommendations to the province on the budgets for the various facilities.

"This is the team approach in the whole health care delivery system," says Potter.

editorial

Treatment seems to be curing the patient

Dr. Richard Potter of Belleville probably holds the record for tackling the largest medical problem in Ontario history.

The patient was sick and was rapidly deteriorating. What was even worse was that rather than an apathetic public, as is usually the case, there existed an irate one.

Potter decided amputation was the only answer, even though he realized this too would result in a public outcry. He went ahead with it and the patient is showing signs of recovery, although it will be some time before the results are known.

Potter, of course, is the minister of health in the Davis government. The "patient" was the old department of health that he inherited when he took over the portfolio.

The disease that had the public up in arms was the rapidly increasing cost of health care in the province. Potter decided that something had to go and proceeded to institute cutbacks.

One of the changes was made on a government-wide basis with the institution of ministries in place of the old departments. The new ministries began operating on a multi-year plan where several ministries with common interests set up policy committees to avoid previous overlapping and subsequent increased costs.

The cutback that caused further public outcry, however, involved a reduction of the number of active treatment beds in hospitals. The public felt it was being cheated out of essential health care.

But Potter and the key personnel on his staff, all of whom met with This Week editorial personnel last week, insist that the alternatives such as nursing homes, outpatient clinics and home care programs have not only maintained the previous level of care but have in some cases increased it.

As we mentioned earlier, it will be some time yet before the results of Potter's actions are known. But he seems to have made the correct diagnosis of the problem and we're all hoping that the patient makes a speedy recovery.

OHIP will remain premium - paid health scheme

Health Minister Dr. Richard Potter says he will not suggest a free, no-premium health insurance plan

The Ontario Health Insurance Plan (OHIP) which pays for an enrollee's medical and hospital bills, creates a $500 million annual premium revenue to help offset claim costs

"Where would that money come from if we introduced a free plan?" Potter asks "We would have to make up the deficit My budget is already $2 billion and there's no way I could operate for less I couldn't suggest that we cut out the premium"

In order to make OHIP free Potter says the province would have to make up the money through taxes and he doesn't think people would want to pay more taxes to support a no-premium health plan

J.R Harnett OHIP enrollment director says he thinks collecting money through premiums is much more painless than increased taxation

Added to that he says employers are paying for large chunks of the insurance package, and in many cases they are paying for everything

People 65 years old and over receive free OHIP coverage, Harnett says and there is also provincial premium assistance on an annual basis for people in certain income brackets

For instance if a person has lived in Ontario for the last 12 months he may apply for full or partial premium assistance which is based on his estimated taxable income

If a student, for example has a nontaxable income he may receive completely free OHIP cover age, he says. However, if the taxable income was $1,000 or less, he would only have to pay half the premium rate

Ninty-nine per cent of the province's population is enrolled in the program and Harnett says the biggest problem his division has is to get people to report any change in their marital or employment status

There are certain people who show a marked lack of concern and only become concerned about their insurance when they need hospitalization " he says "When they leave their employment for another job they feel no real urgency to notify us of that change"

It can be done simply by filling out the document of change that is handed over to an employee who is leaving one business for another, he says

D.M Buchanan, director of OHIP claims division says the biggest problem his department runs into is proper identification of patients

Although the ministry relies on the doctors and hospitals for this information sometimes it is the patients' fault he says and his decision is either to cause a loss to the doctor for a service he performed in good faith, or back him up and try to track down the claimant

Buchanan says his department handles upwards of 3 ½ million claims a month of which a majority are related to services rendered during the previous two months Many doctors, he says, submit claims which could be a whole month's service to one patient, and not one visit per claim

Health Minister Dr. Richard Potter (left) met with staff members of This Week recently to outline the ministry's plans for the future. Here, he chats with Editor Tom Douglas.

When it has been found that a doctor is making excessive claims Buchanan says there is usually a good reason for it and the doctor is not trying to defraud the system

In 1971 the average doctor's gross salary was $60,000 with wide fluctuations between semi-retired, full practice and specialist doctors

Dr. Potter says it only stands to reason that if a doctor wants to shorten his life expectancy by working more hours than most people, that doctor is naturally going to make more money than other people

A little known fact about OHIP, according to Harnett and Buchanan, is that it is recognized throughout the world and most hospitals will honor it

If they don't, however and you have to be hospitalized in Switzerland, say, then all you have to do is get a receipt, pay the bill yourself, mail it to OHIP offices and you will be reimbursed by the ministry

Nursing homes flourish under extended program

The last class to graduate from the Oshawa General Hospital School of Nursing received their diplomas and pins Friday. Beginning in the fall nursing students will attend Durham College

When the ministry of health took over supervision of nursing homes in the province a year and a half ago they probably did the operators of the homes which subsequently went out of business a favor

This is the opinion of G.J. Chatfield, general manager of direct health services for the ministry.

Most of those that went under were smaller homes that probably weren't financially sound before the legislation came in anyway, he said in a recent interview

It's like these jug milk stores. They tell you if you manage a store you'll have a business of your own and all that crap when actually the hours are so long that you're really making less than the minimum wage

The Ontario Health Insurance Plan (OHIP) was expanded April 1 1972 to include care in nursing homes

This meant that Ontario residents who were in need of continuing nursing care of at least 1 - ½ hours per day received extended care insurance benefits of $9 a day while receiving care in a licensed nursing home

As well as meeting standards set by the ministry the nursing home was also required to devote 75 per cent of its beds to caring for people eligible for the health insurance benefit

Chatfield said the new legislation proved unpopular with some patients who were affected by the 75 per cent ruling the time operators who could not meet the standards and staff that did not have the qualifications required

"But that has all settled down he said "That doesn't mean that all homes in the province are up to par but the vast majority are trying

He said despite the fact that the number of homes dropped from 483 before the legislation to 447 at the present time the number of beds has increased from 22,201 to 22 505

"What we have is an interesting marriage between private enterprise and government said Chatfield "There were only three non profit homes out of the initial 483"

He said the extended health care program was introduced for several basic reasons to relieve active treatment hospitals of a bed shortage by allowing transfers to nursing homes, to develop a more comprehensive health care program and to upgrade the standards of nursing home care

The Nursing Home Act of 1967 contained minimal criteria," he said "and the new legislation in 1972 significantly upgraded the standards

He said that prior to the program inspections were done by health units throughout the province, with a variance in the standards demanded.

"In some areas, these inspections where done well, but in others it was pretty haphazard Now with our central inspection service, we have 20 nurses based in London, Ottawa, and Toronto so we know we're getting a more uniform inspection

Another benefit of the extended care program, aside from the fact that the patient no longer has to pay $20 to $30 a day of his own money, is that previously-underserviced areas are now seeing nursing homes built

Where it wasn't economically feasible to build a home before, we've guaranteed a market by putting them under the extended care program," he said

He added that as a result of the program, there are now more applications for nursing homes than they can approve at the moment.

He said that under the legislation, each nursing home must have a registered nurse or registered nursing assistant on duty around the clock.

"Prior to our program, many homes had no RN available at nights"

He added that the patients must be under continuous direct care of a physician, who must visit the patient at least once every three months

"In other words, he can't just put them in there and forget about them," said Chatfield

Health centres bridge gap

Health science centres are leading the way towards breaking down the traditional barriers of training in the medical professions says Dr Granger Reid of the Ontario ministry of health.

There are five health science centres in the province, the newest at McMaster University says Dr Reid executive director of research and analysis for the ministry, which are providing the right type of environment for upgrading the medical profession while bridging the gap between each particular profession within it

The centres allow undergraduates to train together by coordinating the educational process he says and this forms the basis for change and innovation in the profession

Another feature of these centres he says is that they provide the opportunity for breaking down the barriers between the campus and hospital environment.

The success of the centres has been so well received by the ministry that over the next 10 years it will provide $300 million to them in the way of a $30 million a year cash flow

Dr. Reid says there has been a shift in medical education towards an emphasis on the family physician and less on the idea of specialization or super-specialization

This year, he says, 50 per cent of the students from the medical schools have returned to family practice.

Care and cure are not the same thing

By Linda Sutton
Staff Writer

The government of Ontario is trying to erase the concept of the hospital as security blanket from the minds of Ontario residents.

Hospital care is just too costly to be offered to people who aren't desperately ill in need of the sophisticated technology and attention available only in a general hospital, says Dr. J. S. W. Aldis acting executive director for the treatment and rehabilitation division of the ministry of health.

For the past two or three years, the health ministry has been promoting alternatives to hospital care such as nursing homes, home care, out-patients' departments of hospitals and ambulatory care clinics.

Taxpayers just can't afford to continue to pay for the same type of hospital-oriented health care that has been the focal point of health care in Ontario for decades, says Aldis.

In the fiscal year 1973-74 the government is spending more than $1.25 billion to operate 250 to 300 hospitals, he points out, even though the ministry has ordered cutbacks in budgets for almost all hospitals.

At this point he says the government is still studying to what extent less costly bed care can be substituted for hospital treatment.

"We do know that many people now admitted to acute general hospitals can be better cared for in lower-cost facilities.

"Many people in a hospital are looking for care while the hospital is designed to produce a cure," says Aldis. "They are not the same thing. One of the intentions of the hospital is to cure the patient and get him out."

Most neglected

One of the most neglected areas of health care he says has been ambulatory care. The ministry of health is now encouraging development of ambulatory care clinics, sometimes in conjunction with hospital out-patient departments and sometimes independently.

"The prime aim of all health care is to get people back to the maximum possible enjoyment of life," says Aldis. "Sometimes we interfere with this by taking them off their feet and putting them in bed."

A team approach would be utilized in an ambulatory care clinic to serve the patient. In such a clinic he could undergo a minor operation, or a variety of tests, as well as receiving normal patient care for minor illnesses.

When the new approach to health care in Ontario is fully developed, Aldis expects the hospital to become an increasingly specialized facility, used exclusively for patients who require the complex equipment or the constant care that a hospital can provide.

Many others will be treated in nursing homes, at ambulatory care clinics or in their own homes.

Already, he notes, almost no one goes to the hospital with pneumonia unless the illness is accompanied by complicating factors which make it more dangerous or difficult to treat.

So much illness today has roots in the social and economic conditions of people," says Aldis. "It is rooted in the stresses and strains of modern life and can't be cured by an operation or drugs."

Stressful situation

The cutback in the number of active hospital beds offered to the Ontario public has in itself been a stressful situation, he admits.

Many people think that something important has been taken away from them and I can't blame them. They have been taught to believe in the magic of the modern acute hospital by the Ontario government's previous policies, by television medical shows and all sorts of public propaganda.

They feel, says Aldis, that their right to the best health care possible is interfered with if hospital care is tampered with.

The cutback has not created waiting lists of people who need hospital care but who aren't critically ill. Hospitals always have waiting lists, he says, because the public couldn't afford to put enough money into hospital construction and operation to achieve a no-waiting-list situation.

The province now tries to maintain a level of hospital beds to ensure that those who really have to come in can be cared for and cured.

Perhaps the most resented result of the cutback in hospital budgets has been the elimination of the obstetrical unit in a number of hospitals.

The declining birth rate made the reduction necessary, he says. And the ministry feels that better service can be given by concentrating all obstetrical services for an area in one hospital than by reducing the maternity bed count in each.

Maintenance of volume in one hospital means that skills are maintained and that the hospital can afford to offer a wide range of skills, says Aldis.

The 10 or 15 minutes extra which may be needed to get an expectant mother to hospital is really of no consequence, he says.

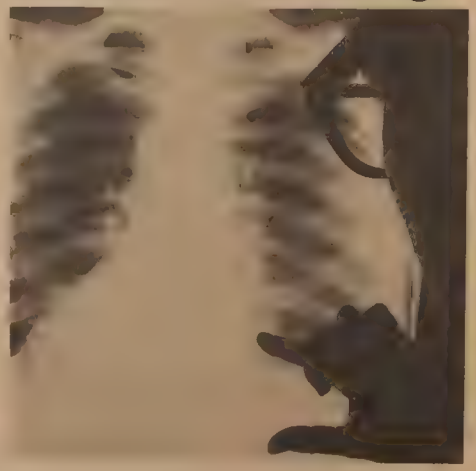
And if it is, it wouldn't matter if the hospital is next door."

Eventually, Aldis foresees some experiments in home delivery of normal babies in normal pregnancies by midwives. In the meantime the ministry of health is aiming at reducing the infant mortality rate by identifying at an early stage high-risk preg-

Hospitals of the future may also offer a variety of care to the patients. Along with the usual active treatment beds, some hospitals may establish 'self-care' units for patients admitted for a battery of complex tests over a period of several days, those who need the equipment available in a hospital but not the constant medical attention.

Economists and financial analysts are now at work in the health ministry to provide technical financial measures of such things as when a patient can be more economically cared for in a nursing home rather than a hospital.

This kind of technical data, combined with the human element of compassion and concern for the care and anxieties of the patient will permit the ministry to establish guidelines for the use of the various kinds of health care facilities available, says Aldis.



People have to be convinced that care and cure are not the same thing, say ministry of health officials. Those who do not require hospitalization are being taken care of through out-patient clinics, nursing homes or home care.

Physician heal thyself was advice Ontario ministry of health heeded

By John Bell
Staff Writer

The doctor who treats himself is generally regarded as a fool, but in the case of the provincial ministry of health it worked just fine and the patient is doing well

Since the Second World War, the ministry has gradually implemented charges that have earned the province the reputation of having one of the best health care programs on the North American continent

Beginning with a health care plan back in 1948, through the introduction of local health units the Ontario Hospital Insurance Plan (OHIP), and the Extended Care Program, the ministry has provided all the important organs for a comprehensive provincial health services program

Nearly three years ago though, ministry officials decided that although all the basic organs were there, the body itself was weak. So it launched itself on a massive, yet unannounced, reorganization course designed to bring all the various elements of the program into a co-operative system

Bill Nichols, assistant deputy minister in charge of finance and information says the whole idea of the reorganization is to reduce the continual and extensive overlapping of many of the services provided or supervised by the ministry and to create a new system which the general public can more easily understand

In achieving this end, Nichol says the ministry itself was totally revamped from the top down with the encouragement of the present minister of health Dr Richard Potter

After almost three years of quiet planning and basic reorganization, the ministry is now divided into three operational units each under the supervision of an assistant deputy minister

The first unit concerns itself with health standards, which includes everything from research and community health, to the professional standards of the various medical organizations or colleges through co-operation with those bodies

This branch of the ministry, says Nichols, is the spearhead the branch which provides the expertise in all areas of public health

It is this branch of the ministry which ensures that health standards are maintained and improved at every health facility hospitals, across the province, and that all standards set are the best for the public

Bill Nichols, assistant deputy minister of health, says his ministry began a reorganization program to reduce overlapping of services and subsequent higher costs.

The second arm of the reorganized ministry is the support branch, or more appropriately called the Finance and Information Services This branch says Nichols, is the housekeeper to the ministry since under it fell such responsibilities as personnel health insurance financial services and auditing, and all the ancillary services

The third arm is what Nichols calls the delivery people branch

Actually this is the Health Services Branch, which looks after the provision of the necessary services to meet the needs of the public in the Hhealth field

This would include the provision of such things as clinics psychiatric hospitals and emergency health services

Each of the three newly-established branches of the ministry is designed to function as a separate entity but at the same time to work co-operatively and effectively with the other two branches under the direction of the minister of health

Setting up this type of system, says Nichols, has not been easy and is still going on Aside from the internal problems with relocation and redistribution of personnel, the ministry is also facing the external problems of trying to determine what the public needs are in the health services area and to meet those needs

The answer to this problem, he says, is public input into the new system

Determining what health services are needed must be done on an area-by-area basis, he says, because only those people in a particular area know what is needed

To achieve this goal, the ministry has begun to set up what it calls District Health Councils These councils are composed of lay people, local politicians and professionals so as to get all views on local needs

As Nichols puts it, 'there's no point in us setting standards which will not work'

In all he says he expects that 30 to 40 district health councils will be set up throughout the province but that makes it all the more important to have a ministry which is geared to provide the direction and services called for

The small mental unit is replacing large institution

By John Bell
Staff Writer

Mental health is no longer the black sheep of the health services, says Dr Pat Lynes, director of the professional services branch of the provincial ministry of health

Lynes says it's taken a long time for government to recognize the need to support mental health services in this province, but the support is now there

Government has been systematically increasing its support of the mental health services over the past few years, but still he says, it's going to take time to revamp the system and the existing facilities

The big change in the system now, he says, is that the emphasis is being taken off the large institution and placed on the smaller psychiatric clinic in the local hospital

The push towards this concept he says, began back in the 1950's with the development of drugs for the treatment of the mentally ill, so that the increase in the population of mental hospitals was gradually reversed

The idea came out, he says, that the psychiatric hospital should be the last link in the treatment chain because of the bad effects of institutionalization on the patient.

Many of the cases which in the past would have meant the patient going to a large mental hospital for treatment are now being handled by the psychiatric units in the local general hospitals

The grounds of the Whitby Psychiatric Hospital

This approach, he says, has significantly reduced the damage to the patient of institutionalization. It's now more desirable to provide treatment in the context of a family and community environment

A hospital stay should be the last resort, he says, and should be there only for the provision of more specialized treatment and rehabilitation

As the psychiatric units in the general hospitals develop, he says, the numbers of patients in the larger institutions will drop, and in fact, this has already begun to take place.

In 1956, he says, there were 18,000-plus patients in mental hospitals in this province, but by 1972 this had dropped to about 7,700

In Ontario now, says Lynes, 9,000 to 10,000 people have been replaced in the community either in nursing homes or in residential homes where the needed care is available to assist the person in coping with community life

District health councils to develop community input into health care

Local government, interested citizens and professionals will soon be working hand in hand directing their community's health needs

Dr. J.C Baldwin, a health ministry area planning co-ordinator says he and his two colleagues are in the process of establishing district health councils in a province wide effort to decentralize the health care system to the community level from the provincial level

We, as area planning co-ordinators will be the primary link between district health councils and the ministry, Dr. Baldwin says "We will set up the councils which will be charged with the district and regional effort to share the responsibilities of planning and implementation of the health care system

The thrust of the ministry's new concept is to share responsibility for planning one comprehensive health care program within the province by assuring the public a voice in setting objectives priorities and pointing out where attention to local problems are urgently required, he says

The councils, which are expected to be composed of half citizen and appointed elected representatives and half professionals from all health agencies, hospitals and the medical profession will co-ordinate all health activities, ensure a balanced effective economical service and evaluate and assess the effectiveness of the delivery of health programs in their district

Three of five such councils are expected to be set up by September in either Hamilton, Niagara, Ottawa, Thunder Bay or Sudbury Baldwin expects that councils will be established province-wide in three years

There were bargains galore during the two-day Downtown Sidewalk Sale in Oshawa last week. Stalls outside the various stores were piled with merchandise that customers could examine at their leisure.

McIlveen bill would limit Ontario shopping hours

Do people need to shop every evening and Sundays too?

MPP Charlie McIlveen doesn't think so.

Just before the session ended in June, McIlveen tabled a private member's bill in the Ontario Legislature designed to establish uniform store hours throughout Ontario and to prevent stores staying open Sunday and late very evening.

The bill will come up for discussion when the house reconvenes in the fall.

If implemented, almost all stores in Ontario would be limited as to hours of operation. McIlveen has recommended store hours of 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. for Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays: 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. Thursdays and Fridays: and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m Saturdays

Commercial establishments would not be allowed to open Sundays or statutory holidays such as Christmas, Easter Monday, Victoria Day, Labor Day and so on However, the bill would permit shops to extend their hours for Christmas shopping from Dec 11 to 23

A number of commercial establishments such as restaurants, drug stores, gas stations, and convenience stores would be exempted from the uniform store hours, as well as stores in a tourist or resort community.

The primary intent of the bill, explains McIlveen, is to eliminate the discrepancies among municipalities across the province

'How many stores have been taken from one municipality into another because of inequities in local store hours?" McIlveen wonders.

His bill is also aimed at preventing stores from over-working their staffs as a result of longer hours forced upon them to compete.

"The whole thing has been overstudied," says McIlveen. "It's time we had a full discussion on it.

"I just threw this out to test the water."

So far the water has been fine.

Since the bill was introduced in the Legislature June 20, McIlveen has received over 700 letters commenting on the proposed legislation and the reaction has been overwhelmingly favorable to the intent to the bill

Only about three people have stated their opposition to the bill, he says, and the rest either support it entirely or have suggested a few minor alterations that do nothing to alter the purpose of the legislation

McIlveen has also won support from some of the major department stores, such as Simpsons, which would like to see shorter shopping days

His major concern is with the working wives. Will the shorter cut-back in shopping hours make life more difficult for them? Do they need stores to stay open till nine or ten every night or on Sunday?

"I'd like anyone who has views on this to contact me," McIlveen stresses

This scene of the Oshawa Hawkeyes falling to the ground while the Oakville Colts romped towards the goals line is indicative of the score during last Friday's opener Oakville won 12-7.

Hawkeyes lost their opener against stronger Oakville club

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

It's back to the drawing board for rookie coach Bill McTeer and his Oshawa Hawkeyes after losing the season opener to the Oakville Colts 12 7 last Friday night at Civic Fields

Hawkeyes, playing before a good home crowd, displayed plenty of bounce along the ground but just couldn't get an aerial attack going

If the Hawkeyes are going to become a winner in the Ontario Junior football Conference they must be able to employee a balanced attack both in the air and along the ground

The sophmore quarterback could have wrapped up the game in the first quarter, but seemed to be tackle-shy when the opportunity presented itself for long gainers on two different occasions

To show the difference between attacks, the Hawkeyes dominated with 245 yards of rushing with Nelson leading the way with 66 yards. He could have had more but was removed after the first quarter through injury

Tom Buchanan took over and directed a conservative offence

Other top runners for Oshawa were Kevin Conlon 60 yards, Jim Barry, 45 yards, Preston Henderson, 36 yards and Brian Frankier, 20 yards

This in itself showed the coaching staff that the club's backfield has offensive scoring punch

Moving the ball in the air was an entirely different story

Oshawa managed only one completion in 13 attempts Oakville, on the other hand, used three quarterbacks Tom Ross Randy Smeremeta and Randy Pope and gained 148 yards in the air while completing six of 13 pass attempts

In the penalty department, Hawkeyes had 10 for a loss of 103 yards including a key penalty on the Oakville two-yard line

Oshawa was guilty of six fumbles, recovering only two After a scoreless first quarter Colts jumped out in front on a TD by Geof Lubert, his first of two majors

Oshawa finally hit pay dirt when hard-working Mike Beckette scored in conjunction with pivot Tom Buchanan

Last season Hawkeyes beat the Colts twice including one game by a pair of TD's and the other by a point

The club now hits the road for three games, playing in Sarnia on Saturday in Lakeshore against the Bears Aug 10 and the Colts in Oakville Aug 17 They return home on Friday Aug 24 to host the Peterb to Panther

Tennis finals

Players from Toronto dominated the Ontario closed doubles tennis championship this weekend at the Oshawa Tennis club

Both finals in the men's and ladies' division were probably the best matches during the past decade

In the men's division, Gus Villanueva, who captured the singles title at the Ontario summer games, teamed up with John MacManus to defeat Keith Porter and Max Ward from Leaside 5-7, 6-4, and 6-1

Villanova and MacManus from Mayfair ousted Brian Millar and Hanny Ajub of Don Mills 6-1, 6-1 in the semi-finals, while Porter and Ward advanced with victories over Steve Segal and Mike Kilpatrick of the Cricket club 3-6 6-2 6-3

In probably the best executed match which took over two hours in high temperatures Marg Bens and Janis Murdock of Leaside were winners over Pam MacManus and Anke Bomsels of Mayfair 7-6, 6-7 6-4 in a real cliff hanger in the trio of games

Earlier Benson and Murdoch dumped Pat Smith and Penny Goldrick from Leaside 6-4 6-1 MacManus and Bomsels earlier and eliminated Eva Barbieto and Rita Retek of Scarboro in semi-finals 6-1

Oshawa Tony's Stats prepared by Bob Wing

Meet Dave Stewart of the Oshawa Tony's

Had it not been for a change of jobs and a coincidental meeting at a tournament, Dave Stewart would not be playing for the Oshawa Tony's

Some years ago, Stewart's Cardinal Pats met the Tony's in the final game of Brockville baseball tournament. Knowing that a change of jobs would take him shortly to Oshawa (as the new athletic director at Durham College) Stewart arranged with manager Jerry Brooks for a try-out

He joined the Tony's three years ago as a utility man, filling in in both the infield and the outfield. Currently, he holds down a fulltime position at second base, and is very happy with the increased playing time

This present season has had its good and bad points, according to Stewart. He comments that he has been unfortunately unable to hit successfully. Usually a good hitter, he just cannot find that open space in the infield

On the brighter side, he has much enjoyed the Ontario Fastball League more than the Michigan circuit Tony's competed in last season. There is less travelling in the new league, and the teams are more evenly matched, as is shown by the tight league standings

Toronto Globals who are currently fighting with Oshawa for first spot, are Stewart's pick as the team to beat in their division. He gives Tony's an excellent chance of capturing the top honors, although, he comments, there is much time left for change in the standings

OSHAWA TONY'S PLAYER OF THE WEEK

We take great pleasure in saluting the 'Player of the Week' each week in this spot.

City council prepares for second This Week beating August 14 th

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

Who says newspaper people aren't good athletes

Last winter the staff of This Week proved they are by beating the mayor and his council in an exhibition hockey game at the auditorium before nearly 3,000 fans

Now it's summer, and the City Hall squad, headed by Mayor James Potticary, is back for another sports lesson - this time in softball

It's a fun game scheduled for Tuesday, Aug 14 at Alexandra Park as part of a double-header with Oshawa Tony's hosting Burlington in scheduled Ontario Fastball League game

The real winners will be the boys at the fire halls and their favorite charity, muscular dystrophy which will receive all gate receipts from the twin bill

The local firefighters have been helping aid MD for more than a decade now and this is another way in which the local sports fans can watch excellent fastball and help charity at the same time

Advance tickets are now on sale at any fire hall in Oshawa plus at any Tony's home game Sports Villa and at This Week's King Street office

Admission charge is $2 00 for the entire family, or 75 cents per adult, 50 cents for students, and 25 cents for children

The City Hall club is reported to be bringing in a ringer in pitcher Norm Bagnell a former Tony's pitching ace of the 1950's. Last night the City Hall club even held a workout with their fancy new uniforms which they purchased at their own expense

Peter Brouwer, publisher of This Week, is confident in his team's ability to be a winner. In fact he has issued a curfew for all his team members and has taken off on a holiday to get into shape

Brouwer won't release his starting line-up but he has had yours truly contact the Detroit area for a top pitcher, possibly Bob Greer to come in and pitch for this game

Brouwer, of course, may call a workout at any time

At present John Brady, "Mr. Softball" in Oshawa, is expected to be the umpire-in-chief with fire Chief Ernie Stacey and police Chief Jon Jenkins acting as base umps.

Action gets under way at 7:15 p.m. for the This Week - City Hall game while the O.F.L. game between Tony's and Burlington is set for 8:30 p.m sharp

Our advice is to purchase your tickets early as only 1 000 seats are going to be sold

McArthur sees rout as city plays This Week

By Ald. Bruce McArthur
City Hall No Stars Coach

City hall will be renewing the feud with the infamous sports buffs at This Week who claimed they beat us in hockey

Of course we're talking about the softball match set for Aug 14 at Alexandra Park

Last night we had a vigorous, two-hour workout and have more practices scheduled

As player coach and catcher for Council team I've secured the services of Norm Bagnell who has thrilled local fans for years pitching with Pedlars and Tony's. Bagnell who pitched in Toronto last year boasts at least one no-run no-hit game in each season of his illustrious 35-year career

This will be his only game this year and Bagnell feels he has at least one more no-hitter in him! Bagnell has been working with me now for the past two weeks and is showing his old style

Mayor Jim Potticary looks good at first base with Controller Allan Pilkey at second making slick moves

Ald Cliff Pilkey a veteran softball player with the Polish White Eagles will have to miss this game and we're looking for a replacement

Ald Jack Wiley will work the "hot corner" with Con "Big" John McLaughlin looking for a position in the outfield or infield Wiley played his ball in Windsor and McLaughlin came directly from the sandlots of the boondocks in New Brunswick

Ald Mike Lisko, if he starts hitting could break into the line-up Way out in left field should be Ald John DeHart with Ald Mike Breaugh showing a strong arm from centre field

Ald George Drynan and fleet-footed Ald Alan Dewar rounds out the outgarden Ruth Beswick who was an outstanding goaltender for our club last winter, will be handling the relief pitcher if needed

Con Christine Thomas has been set up as a designated hitter and bat girl Of course this game is for a good cause, so our club is taking it serious and has just purchased new uniforms for the game

Gaels GM denies rumors club will fold

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

Despite rumors the Oshawa Green Gaels, one of the most respected Junior "A" lacrosse teams in Canada are not going to fold says the clubs' general manager, Brian Drew.

"I don't know where these rumors got started, snapped an upset Drew, "but one thing for sure the Gaels will be back in the Ontario Lacrosse Association come next spring.

Gaels just completed their worst record since the team was started in 1963. They finished in last place with a disappointing six win 22 defeat record.

The Gaels suffered at the gate with home attendance down and Drew admits that the Gaels had a lot of pitfalls this summer.

"We had 13 players with Junior "A" experience returning to the roster in spring, and right from training camp everything went wrong.

Coach Ron Pither starting his first full season as head taskmaster, had Murray Cawker Tom Rorabeck Jimmy Browne and Doug Bannon all quit the club for a variety of reasons.

John Reid a sure-fire 100-goal scorer failed to recover from an injury the year earlier and the regular goaltender threw in the towel due to work commitments.

Add this up to go along with the unfortunate drowning of Ray Trudell, an impressive rookie from Cornwall and any team has problems.

Pither was forced to go with a rookie-studded line-up which lost seven games by one goal, and three more by two goals.

Gaels were forced to use a lot of inexperienced players and lacked a floor general like Cawker Bannon and Rorabeck.

It's hard to motivate the players, says Drew and a lot of patrons compare us with the junior hockey club, the Generals. You must remember that hockey players can make more than $60 00 a week for their talents and they have a professional career to look forward to. But in lacrosse it's a different story all together.

One major problem has to be the minor setup which was reorganized by Danny Kocho this summer. His new format should pay off in a couple years.

It marked the second year that the Oshawa Gaels played less than a .500 percentage. The year earlier, Gaels had 11 wins in 17 games but still came even more alive in the play offs finally losing to the eventual Canadian champs, Peterboro, in the Eastern finals.

Look for a new executive for next season under the Gaels as some of the veteran executive members have already indicated that they won't be serving in the same capacity next season.

One player the Gaels can build around is 18 year old Stan Cockerton who finished third overall in the scoring collecting 56 goals and 72 assists which was 20 percent of the club's entire scoring.

The problem of working mothers

By Rev. John A. Robb

As you will have gathered by now perhaps to your chagrin this column seeks to speak to problems of the here and now in addition to that which will be hereafter

Rather than avoiding delicate matters therefore we are endeavoring to face the issues very squarely!

My father who has been an Anglican minister these 45 years was stationed for a while in Uganda East Africa In the particular tribe where he was working the men sat resolutely under a tree while the women got on with the work!

While we have not returned as yet to this phenomenon evident among primitive peoples there is a vast increase in the phenomenon of working mothers

The main question is whether or not the absence of the mother upon a child's return from school contributes to a lack of security thereby bringing about emotional distress later in life

Medical men tell us that in recent studies made of schizophrenia lack of love and security at age two or thereabouts was a contributing factor to the malady which developed in later life

Then again with a mother holding two jobs does she become tense and irritable in working with the children?

In preparation for a recent open line TV program on this subject I consulted with one or two psychologists as to whether there were differences in emotional problems, crime rate, drug use and soon between the children of working and non-working mothers

While there do not appear to be any statistics available those working in the field indicate that no differences are in evidence

I remember a fellow quoting Titus 2 Verse 5 to me one time emphasizing the phrase keepers at home and he was not being frivolous It would appear that this would have to do with wives neglecting household duties and running around engaging in gossip and being busybodies in other people's business

In our particular missionary program all of the wives are engaged full-time in outside work which is the reason why we operate eight schools for missionaries children!

Sometimes we are told that when the family is taken into confidence by the parents and the necessity of both parents working is explained to them and their co-operation enlisted it contributes to the solidarity and emotional maturity of the unit

My own opinion is that where there are pre-school children the mother should if at all possible be at home Thereafter it will rise or fall on what sort of arrangements are made i e whether the children are allowed to return home by themselves to an empty house or proper arrangements are made with other adults for their careful supervision until the return of the parents

Bike skills to be tested

Almost 140 youngsters from all 37 Oshawa parks will be competing for honors and prizes at the fifth annual Oshawa bicycle rodeo Thursday evening

Mayor Jim Potticary and Chief Jon Jenkins will open the rodeo at the Civic Auditorium at 7 p m Thursday by demonstrating their cycling skills on a bike with a surrey on top

Each of the parks has held its own cycle rodeo to select contestants for the four divisions senior boys and senior girls ages 12 to 15 junior boys and junior girls ages 8 to 12)

First second and third place trophies will be awarded in each division

In addition all non-prizewinning contestants will be eligible for a draw The prizes are two bicycles

We have over $300 worth of prizes says Oshawa Safety Officer Constable Tom Homes who credits with making the whole thing possible donations by Midtown Mall Simpson Sears Eatons the Oshawa Kinsmen Club the Oshawa Safety Council Canadian Tire and Sports Ltd

Stouffville couple charged

A Stouffville couple will be arraigned in court in Whitby on September 18 following charges laid against them by the RCMP detachment from Oshawa

Charged July 27 with possession of an illegal drug for the purposes of trafficking were Brian John Millar and Judith Rae both of Stouffville

They were found with 80 capsules of MDA and were also jointly charged with possession of marijuana which was apparently still in the growing stage

WHICH IS YOURS?

Mankind did not need garments until sin came in His first garment was one of his own making It was a very fragile piece of work It could not last very long A little heat from the sun and it would wither away for fig leaves do not have lasting qualities

But God came down and made a much more lasting garment for mankind. It was a gift but had to be received. It was gotten with the shedding of blood

Just as Adam and Eve felt the insufficiency of their own works of righteousness, their utter inability to cover their nakedness of sin, so Isaiah speaks of God's people Israel BUT WE ARE ALL AS AN UNCLEAN THING, AND ALL OUR RIGHTEOUSNESSES ARE AS FILTHY RAGS.

Righteousness then is likened unto a garment that one wears In the flesh dwelleth no good thing So any effort of the flesh, the old nature, to produce works of righteousness is bound to fail. Such works are burned up in the testing by fire

There is the parable of the man who came to the wedding, but without a wedding garment. He that his own garments were good enough. He had refused the proffered apparel. He was thrown out This is to teach us that we cannot stand in the presence of God with anything less than His own righteousness That garment has been provided by the shed blood of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ When the sinner is clothed with that righteousness then God looks upon him and sees only the righteousness of His beloved Son

The question that man has to face is just this is he willing to trade his filthy rags for the robe of righteousness Can he ever lose in such a trade And we who have made the trade now wonder how it could possibly be that a man would be so proud of his own works his own righteousness, that he would prefer to keep his old rags They stink!

THOU HAST A FEW NAMES EVEN IN SARDIS WHICH HAVE NOT DEFILED THEIR GARMENTS; AND THEY SHALL WALK WITH ME IN WHITE. To the Laodicean church, the Lord said, I COUNSEL THEE TO BUY OF ME . . . WHITE RAIMENT, THAT THOU MAYEST BE CLOTHED, AND THAT THE SHAME OF THY NAKEDNESS DO NOT APPEAR.

When the great marriage supper comes it will be granted to the wife of the Lamb THAT SHE SHOULD BE ARRAYED IN FINE LINEN, CLEAN AND WHITE: FOR THE FINE LINEN IS THE RIGHTEOUSNESS OF THE SAINTS.

There's More To Real Estate Than Just A License To Sell

It's not really tough to get a license to sell Real Estate.

Show that you're competent, remember enough to pass the government course examinations, put in the required effort and learning time and you can get a paper that officially calls you a real estate salesrepresentative But that's all it does, it doesn't guarantee you'll be a success that's entirely up to you.

At Young & Biggin we've taken steps to do more than just help you get a license We're the first-company in our field to install a closed circuit television system as part of our latest training program and we've secured exclusive Metropolitan Toronto rights to the best in-depth, video realty sales course ever produced $250,000. went into the development of the R.S.L. training system. Twenty hours of taped programs by the world's top experts are integrated with the live lectures and seminars

If you join our instruction program, you can study while earning a living in real estate. Y&B offers daytime courses or special night classes and it's absolutely free.

If you are thinking of a career in the real estate business, with top commissions, you owe it to your future to speak with Jim Jameson about the unique Y & B training system

You can call him at 942-4751. YOUNG AND BIGGIN LTD., REALTOR

The issue of a superboss for Oshawa's recreation services may once again be revived.

A number of city elected and appointed officials are once again considering the appointment of an administrator of recreational services, an idea approved by the 1972 council early last year then killed in the midst of hot political debate just over a year ago.

This Week has learned from reliable sources that the same problems of alleged ineffective management that prompted the original superboss proposal remain prevalent.

While no formal move has been initiated to make staff adjustments in the recreation area, a number of alderman have told This Week that changes will probably come during the administrative reorganization resulting from the initiation of regional government.

A major problem in the provision of recreational services to the city appears to be lack of co-ordination among the three departments that look after parks, recreation programs and arena facilities.

Until this year, the parks, property and recreation committee of council was responsible for co-ordinating the efforts of the parks and property department headed by Pat Kennedy, the recreation department headed by Wendall Brewster and the management of the Civic Auditorium and arenas under the guidance of Bill Kurelo.

The 1972 board of control recommended centralizing these areas under one administrator and won initial council approval. But due to pressure from sports and parks groups the majority of council members eventually scuttled the idea.

The 1973 council took a new approach to the problem by shifting the parks and property commission to a division of the public works department reporting to the public works committee of council.

In late spring parks and property got bounced around again this time to the social services and recreation committee which is responsible also for recreation matters.

Since the conclusion of Fanfare Week and the Ontario Summer Games, the administrator concept has reappeared, amid concern about personnel problems, inconsistent administration in the various recreational areas and some personality conflicts and low morale in at least one of the departments.

Catherine Lee Thomas, 6, of 1040 Mohawk Street in Oshawa is obviously less than enthused by the "friend" Bryan Pearse, a medical student at McMaster University brought with him on a visit to the North Oshawa Public Library.

editorial

Outside view of administrative setup is crucial to new region

Putting together the right staff in the right way for the Durham Region shouldn't be an amateur effort.

Only one appointment to a regional office has been made to date - the naming of Walter Beath as the regional chairman

Although Beath won't officially take office until the regional council confirms his appointment Oct. 15, he can set the tone for the regional administration by taking a positive and aggressive stand now

He can sit back and wait for two and a half months or he can take advantage of his position and the province's eagerness to make regionalization work.

This Week feels it is absolutely imperative that the new chairman approach provincial treasurer John White and his boys immediately to insist upon the hiring of a firm of management consultants to recommend an administrative framework for the region

The first three years of the region will be crucial ones in which sensitive decisions should be made. The quality of the administration will to a large extent determine the quality of government the regional council provides to the people of Durham.

Of course the regional council and its chairman are in the end responsible for the quality of administration. They must avoid at all costs a slipshod, amateurish approach to the organization of the regional administration.

In earlier regions, the staffs of the various municipalities typically got together and decided who was going to get what where. Or else they undertook political campaigns for the various positions

In the Durham Region it shouldn't be an inside job. The impartiality of outside experts is needed to objectively design an effective and modern administrative system.

In most municipalities, especially Oshawa, the major department heads have created their own fiefdoms, in part because the administrative system defied any effort to operate as a team and promoted isolationism

The regional council has an opportunity to avoid the situation by bringing in consultants who will recommend a system and counsel the council in making the major appointments

Some of the top people can be found in the region. But this approach will make it possible for the council to look for qualified people outside the region in situations where the local top days don't meet the criteria

Quick action in this is a necessity and this is the reason why Beath should act now. Less than five months remain until the region becomes operative. Shortly after the council is elected the senior administrative personnel should be appointed to set things in order for the January 1 start date.

A management consultant will probably need a couple of months to assess the situation and prepare a recommendation as to structure. This operation can rationally be performed in the two months leading up to the regional elections Oct. 1. Then the regional council will be able to settle right down to the task of approving the scheme and appointing people

Well, Chairman Beath, will you accept this assignment?

Parking problems

It would seem that if a person was to help another person circumvent a law, that first person is just as guilty as the criminal.

Such a case has come to light just recently, and the two parties involved are the Oshawa General Hospital and the City of Oshawa.

Pending a provincial cabinet decision on whether to allow citizens the right to a re-hearing of the Ontario Municipal Board regarding a rezoning application made by the hospital so it could build the Parkwood parking garage, the hospital board of governors decided to start construction of the garage anyway

That would have been fine except for one thing: the city never issued a building permit for the structure

In some cases, while an appeal is being lodged, the courtesy is shown by the builders of stopping construction. It is not mandatory by any means, but some bodies do it

Knowing full well that it was technically in contravention of city building and zoning bylaws to begin construction without a building permit, the hospital decided to go ahead anyway.

If it had been you or me building a swimming pool or garage without the permit the city would have immediately halted the construction by issuing a work stoppage order until such times as the proper channels had been gone through and the building permit had been issued.

The city knew full well what the hospital's intentions were and yet it never once moved to halt construction.

A week ago, city officials even went to Queen's Park with hospital officials to lobby their case with the cabinet

We were under the impression that laws were laws and no matter who bent them, the appropriate action should be taken. That is what our democratic system, supposedly, is all about.

But, because the city agreed with the hospital's stand, it ignored the infraction, no matter how petty it may seem Because the party involved is a large institution run by powerful community leaders and not just the average citizen, the city, in its "wisdom", decided to turn its head the other way.

It is, to say the least, amazing!

The city should consider its recent past actions very carefully. To ignore its own laws could set a dangerous precedent.

Chairman Beath can either play ball -- or run with it

by linda sutton

The selection of Walter Beath last week was a barefaced admission by the Ontario government that they were afraid to give Des Newman the job

The Whitby Mayor has always been a force to be reckoned with at all three levels of government. There is no doubt that if named chairman - and there can be no question as to his ability and qualifications for the job - Newman would have had his share of confrontations with provincial authorities.

While supporting in principle regionalization and the concept of the Toronto-Centred Region plan, he certainly would have made strong stands as to how these concepts are to be implemented in the Durham Region

Although a Liberal, Newman can in some respects be compared to Provincial Premier Bill Davis.

Both are strong-willed, determined men with a vision and a true desire to serve the best interests of their constituencies Both are to some degree elitists and strong management men

But both have the ability to relate at ground level to people. They are very strong identities, although they sometimes depress their personalities in an attempt to unify a body of support behind them.

Any battle between Davis and Newman would be a battle of equals in political savvy and force if not constitutional power

Newman is the type of guy who would have virtually whipped the region into shape, leading the way to the appointment of some bright and imaginative people in the top staff positions, and helping to shape a well-ordered and vigorous region

He proved his mettle as president of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities by establishing municipalities as a recognized and polished element in confederation.

As a candidate in the 1968 federal election, Newman amassed more Liberal votes in Oshawa and Whitby than have ever been tallied He lost the close three-way race by only 150 votes.

As the father of the Oshawa Area Planning and Development Study for most of its short life, the Whitby Mayor tested his ability to bring the various factions in the region together.

Intelligent, articulate, dynamic, even charismatic - certainly to people in Whitby and also to people in other area municipalities who admire his style and leadership - Newman would have made an exciting first regional chairman.

Newman is a man to be reckoned with. Apparently the province decided not to pick up the challenge.

Davis and provincial treasurer John White seem to have selected for the most part staunch Tories and not-too-forceful personalities as the regional chairmen to serve the four new regions that will come into being January 1.

Beath is the exception in the group as far as his party politics go. Tories say he's a Liberal and the Liberals claim he's a Conservative. Beath says he's politically neutral.

The big blue Tories in Queen's Park no doubt think their regional chairmen will be yes-men, content with minding the shop and keeping their noses out of provincial decisions related to development of the Toronto-Centred region.

Let's hope Beath disappoints them

He could turn out to be the mediator he has appeared to be all along or he could rise to the greater challenge of being a leader of men and women

The office of chairman can be as weak or as strong as the individual choses to make it

And sometimes people become leaders because they are given that job to do

The challenge is there

The opportunity is available.

I'd like to see wiry Walter pick up the ball and run with it

In the hectic life of Ontario Riding MP Norm Cafik, family fun sometimes takes precedence over matters of national importance. As caucus leader and parliamentary assistant to Health and Welfare Minister Marc Lalonde and with his consituency work, Cafik rarely gets any time to spend with his three young daughters Yvonne, Julie and Monica. But one day last week he took the three of them fishing on the Ottawa River in the early hours of the morning. The original plan was to spend a couple of hours fishing and leave about 9 a.m. to get back for a 10 a.m. meeting with the boss. After fishing for hours diligently without a bite the girls finally began to make a few catches about 15 minutes before Cafik had to take them back. But a few works from eight-year-old Yvonne convinced the hard-working MP to take a morning off. "Please stay Daddy," she said. "I don't think your boss will fire you if you tell him I asked you to stay." Norm stayed and Lalonde had a good laugh the next day. By the way, he still has his job, although he is vacationing in an unknown location in the east until September

Ontario South MPP Bill Newman is not enjoying his "summer vacation." Although the legislature is in summer recess, Newman is a member of the select committee that has been investigating the new Ontario Hydro head offices for months and he can't see an end to the hearings until at least September. "We've heard enough evidence - over 1.25 millions words," he says. "Anymore is a waste of the taxpayer's money." While he's discouraged at the length of the hearings, Newman says he's prepared to continue to sit and listen if any new evidence is going to be brought out.

Would you walk 20 feet to save 90 cents? If so, the next time you want to order a corned beef sandwich at a particular Oshawa restaurant, get up from the table and walk out onto the patio to order it. The sandwich will cost you 85 cents there, whereas inside it sells fo $1.75. Crazy, ain't it?

They say people get the type of daily newspaper they deserve and a good example to illustrate this occurred in the Oshawa Times last Wednesday when they published a disgusting picture of the marks left on Gibb Street when a man was killed by being dragged feet first some 15 feet by a truck. Nice reading at the dinner table, what?

The current issue of the Oshawa Chamber of Commerce newsletter contains an item that bears repeating: Chimo! (pronounced Cheemo) is our new all-Canadian toast. When you raise your glass say "Chimo". For decades we have been using other countries' toasts -- Cheers, Skoal, Salut, A votre sante, Bottoms up, etc. Chimo is an old Eskimo greeting. When two Eskimos meet on the Arctic tundra, each rubs his chest in a circular motion and says Chimo (Are you friendly?). The answer is a repeat of the gesture and the word Chimo (Yes, I am friendly). From now on, let's say Chimo. Explain its meaning to those who inquire but at cocktail parties, don't get carried away. Remember, he-she rubs his-her own chest.

You deserve a break today with MacDonald

by tom douglas

Not many people go around any more asking you what your religion is, but if anybody asked, me, I'd tell them I'm a MacDonaldite

I'm a disciple of John D. MacDonald, an American writer of fiction, who has produced more than 60 novels in the 20-odd years he's been writing.

I've read them all, except his latest, The Scarlet Ruse, which has just hit the newsstands. As soon as another member of the sect tipped me off that it had arrived, I hurried over to Coles in the Oshawa Centre and bought it.

Inflation has even hit the book trade, though, because where at one time you used to be able to buy MacDonald's latest for 50 cents, The Scarlet Ruse cost me $1.25

But like an alcoholic who has to have that bottle, or or a heroin addict who desperately needs a fix, I'd fork over whatever the dealer demanded for a new book by John D. MacDonald.

Ian Fleming of James Bond famewasquoted as saying that a book by John D. MacDonald was the only one he would buy after merely glancing at the title to check that he hadn't read it before

Richard Condon, author of The Manchurian Candidate and other successful novels, says on the flyleaf of The Scarlet Ruse: "John D. MacDonald is the great American storyteller."

And yet, I wouldn't be surprised to learn that a vast majority of the people who read this column (no smart cracks, please) have never even heard of the man.

When I've mentioned his name to many people, they've replied that they didn't know Canada's first prime minister also wrote fiction -- which is interesting for several reasons.

However, most people have probably been exposed to John D. MacDonald without realizing it. Movie buffs, for instance, might be surprised to learn that Cape Fear, starring Gregory Peck, Polly Bergen and Robert Mitchum, was based on a MacDonald novel.

So was a recent television rerun, Mantrap, starring David Janssen, Jeffrey Hunter and Stella Stevens. And the movie Darker Than Amber which featured Rod Taylor and Theodore Bikel was based on MacDonald's fictional character Travis McGee.

It's the McGee character that makes me a MacDonaldite. His philosophy of life is exactly the same as mine -- but where I conform and knuckle under to society, McGee doesn't. So I get a vicarious thrill out of the way he handles himself

But MacDonald isn't just another Mickey Spillane or Earle Stanley Gardner type of writer who can knock out a cliche-filled novel almost overnight.

His books can sermonize or philosophize on the major issues of our times without boring the reader. And when you get to the end of a story, you don't feel you've been cheated by a writer who throws in a twist to the plot to get himself out of the corner he's written himself into

And for anyone who has ever fantasized about having the edge over the rest of society -- whether it be through extra-sensory perception or the ability to see through walls or what have you -- MacDonald's The Girl, The Gold Watch and Everything will prove very entertaining.

Anyway, I think I've made it fairly obvious that John D. MacDonald is my kind of writer. And by the time this column gets into print, I plan to have a healthy chunk of The Scarlet Ruse read and digested.

If there are any other MacDonald fans out there, give me a call some time and we'll compare notes.

Parking lot complaint results in ban for all at LCBO lot

Sir:

Recently both myself and my employer parked at the Richmond and Bond Streets L.C.B.O. parking lot in Oshawa and were ticketed.

I know of several people who park their cars there all day and do not work at the liquor store, but they receive no tickets at all.

The property belongs to the government and I know one can't pay anyone to park there so how come some people are allowed to park there and others aren't? It doesn't seem fair to me.

Mrs. E. Annis

• • • • • •

This Week contacted a spokesman for the manager at the store who said that some people were granted special parking privileges in the parking lot because they worked right around the corner and had no place else to park. Because of your complaint, he says, they will no longer be allowed to park there. He admits the store cannot extend parking privileges to a few, and not to all.

Sir:

I would prefer not to give my name, but I would like to see this letter in your paper. Primarily it is just a question.

Why do people 65 years and over who are trying to get along on a pension have to pay school tax?

After paying this tax over the years I don't think that too many 65-year-olds have children going to school. In fact, a considerable number never had any children in the first place.

I feel that if school taxes were stopped at 65 years of age, many retirees would enjoy a much better life.

Curious

• • • • • •

The subject of your letter has been an issue in many a municipal election. Many politicians feel that the province should pick up the entire cost of education and the homeowner should not be made to pay anything.

However, that's politics and nothing that will help you at the moment.

If you find that it is a hardship to pay your taxes, you can receive municipal and school tax credit assistance if you are indeed 65 years old or older

Under the plan you can get a credit for half of your tax bill total, or up to $150, (whichever is less) each year for as long as you live. The catch is that the city puts a lien on your home. After you die your heirs can pay the tax debt, or the government will sell your house, take back the money it has given you in tax credits through the years and give the rest of the money to your heirs.

It may seem like a harsh answer to your question, but until something better comes along an interest-free tax credit seems to be about the best they can do for senior citizens at the moment.

If you are interested, you can get all the necessary information to make a tax credit application at the municipal tax department.

DeHart accuses detractor of setting up a smokescreen

Sir:

I have always been reluctant to get into a hassle regarding letters to the editor regarding myself. However, in my opinion when facts are distorted and incorrect statements are made then I believe a reply is warranted

First of all, Mr Mehring in his letter to the editor said and I quote in part, "It is unfortunate for Oshawa that the Chairman of the Oshawa Planning Board Alderman Bruce McArthur cannot give an interview to a newspaper on a plan in front of his board without being viciously attacked by a head hunter, John DeHart", end of quote

Perhaps Mr Mehring does not realize this report regarding the McLaughlin Square was not given before the board before it was released to the Oshawa Times. The fact is that City Council met in camera which means without the benefit of the news media to discuss the McLaughlin Square This matter was then referred to the Planning Board

My argument was and still is that no release of this confidential information should have been disclosed until the Planning Board members had held their meeting on this pertinent matter While I do not wish to defend any news media except to say in all fairness, all the news media should have received the same courtesy in receiving this news release at the same time and at the proper time

The next item that Mr Mehring brings to the attention of the Editor is regarding my insurance office and to quote part of his statement, "Have the City Fathers protected him from prosecution?" end of quote. This statement is far fetched and is almost unbelievable that anyone including Mr Mehring would make such a horrendous statement about my fellow council members

However Mr Mehring should realize that this City Council did not make the original decision and this council merely endorsed the previous council action

Mr Mehring also goes on to say and I quote in part "How does Alderman DeHart gain entrance to apartment buildings to solicit insurance business when others are not allowed entry" end of quote

First of all we don't solicit business in apartments we merely have a brochure left in the door or in the mail box advising people of our service

In the final part of his letter to the Editor Mr Mehring suggested that if I am going to seek public office again, then I will have to answer to number of questions

I wish to go on record as saying to Mr Mehring I would be more than happy to answer any questions he would wish to ask

As a matter of fact, I tried to contact Mr Mehring regarding these questions, but he has an unlisted number I further suggest, unless Mr Mehring is willing to contact me then he is only creating a smoke screen for himself or someone else at the expense of myself.

Thank you for your space

Ald. John DeHart,
Oshawa

Help, not pity, needed

Sir

Mr Kassinger s reply to Mr Broadbent leaves me wondering why he is scutinizing him in such a way

Like Mr Kassinger, I have been too busy to read all in print about Mr Broadbent and I have not read any of his recent speeches on housing

I believe that the price of housing is going up because there is a greater demand Since there is this demand, those who can afford to buy land hold onto it until the demand is even greater and prices go even higher

In order to lessen the demand there is need for more homes and more homes will be built when controls are placed on the basic cause of prices sprocketing

When I go to a store to buy food and clothing, I know that there are few items there that have not increased rapidly in price over the past year

If the increases I see, are in one area only, perhaps I can devise methods to budget and save for my family s third need and that is a home

With inflation hitting each area of basic needs, I feel that I should forget about buying a home

Mr Kassinger seems to show concern for the inadequate housing of the citizens under the government of the 'Iron Curtain' Countries Perhaps advice to them would be, to spend less on defence and more on the needs of their citizens

I fail to see however what the Churchillian term 'Iron Curtain has to do with 1973 and Mr Broadbent The inference from his statement regarding Mr Broadbent s theories is obvious and it puts Mr Kassinger s attitudes in a very poor light Low tactics are neither convincing nor amusing

Mr Broadbent is not blind to the fact that new burdens are being placed on those least able to bear them I cannot explain what Mr Broadbent means by social housing in his fullest view

The term to me means housing for the members of society and since we are all members of this Canadian society then this term encompasses everyone

I would like to see the chance being given to those who cannot buy or are finding difficulty in saving for their downpayment, to rent their homes at a rate which will allow them to save

They should have the option to buy these homes This could be done through a scheme to allow them the option of choosing a mortgage rate below the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation rate on surrender ing partial income tax relief

I would like to see help being provided to the least well off ratepayers and assistance for the modernization and repairs of older homes through housing trust funds

One other thing I would like to see happen is that Mr Kassinger and others who use the methods of playing on people's emotions, to win a trick, would stop doing so

To quote from his letter 'the sad part about this whole matter is that not too many years ago the average young married couple could afford to buy a house in Oshawa I know because I sold them

Parents or others who were established helped these young people when possible Now young people see that their parents are better to hold onto their hard earned and hard saved money for the day when they will face extortionate prices on a fixed income

The only assistance for married couples is the bank and the mortgage company. Mr. Broadbent is, I am sure, aware of all the issues Do not run him down, Mr Kassinger

Little fish who go into the housing market-place and find there sharks who will swallow them whole, need leaders who will create a safer market place They do not need pity which seems to be what you, Mr Kassinger, are offering!

Man must act

Sir:

God gave to all who live on this earth, a gloriously beautiful world He gave to all the four seasons with the pleasures and fruits thereof

He gave us the splendid lakes, rivers and waterways and our great oceans - all these filled with fish for our pleasure and maintenance

He gave us all the beauty and grandeur of our magnificent mountains. He gave us the splendid forests filled with game and beautiful birds - all these for our pleasure and sustenance

Man, who believes himself to be infallible has taken all these benefits - bestowed on man and his kind, by a gracious and kindly God - and has polluted the lakes rivers and even the oceans so much, that the once pure and sweet water must now be treated with chemicals before man and his kind can drink or use this once clean, pure water

The air around us is polluted so badly by man-made machines which emit fumes and smoke into the once long-ago clean air and atmosphere

This is causing much sickness to all unless man uses his ingenuity and skill to create or produce a panacea for all these ills, the human race as we are today will in the not too distant future) be doomed!

Rubber stamp exercise

Sir·

With all the excitement pertaining to the appointment of the regional government chairman for Durham, it is easy to get facts mixed with fiction

I refer to the statement in your paper dated August 1 and on page 2B, "Probably his (in reference to the chairman) first duty will be to appoint a clerk for the region...)

The act to establish the Regional Municipality of Durham states under Section 17, subsection (2) "The Regional Council may by by-law appoint a chief administrative officer

Section 20, subsection (1) states "the Regional Council shall appoint a clerk..." Subsection (2) states also "The Regional Council may appoint a deputy clerk

Furthermore subsection (4) states "the chairman appointed under subsection 1 of Section 9, shall appoint an acting clerk who shall have all the powers and duties of a clerk for the purposes of the first meeting of the Regional Council in the year 1973 and thereafter until the Regional Council appoints a clerk under this section "

These facts should be madeclear to your readers

Editor's Note: As we see it, Mr. Peleshok's comments are a lesson in semantics. Acting clerk or otherwise, it's the Chairman's duty to appoint one. Council's ratification is expected to be no more than a rubber stamp exercise.

Boxer jabs CABA

Sir:

As chairman of the Toronto Boxing Association, I was both surprised and saddened by the story you did on the Oshawa Olympic Boxing Club

This club is a member of the Canadian Amateur Boxing Association and has its roots in Montreal where it rose from the ashes of the AAU

Armed with a grant from the federal government, they then tried to take over boxing in this province They are operating with their own rules and officials contrary to the rules and regulations laid down by the Ontario Athletic Control Act which is legislated law in this province

On different occasions CABA has sent representatives to boxing shows run by OABA clubs and threatened those taking part with expulsion from Olympic competition

The official amateur association in Ontario (OABA) has by far the larger enrolment of boys and has promoted 10 times the number of boxing shows, all within the jurisdiction of the Ontario Athletic Control Act

In your city, you have two of the best clubs in Ontario - I speak of the O'Reilly Athletic Club and the North East Athletic Club, both run by boxing experts, Grant O'Reilly and Fred Richardson With little or no help from the city they have produced some first-rate fighters

It is organizations like CABA that hinder the sport and discourage those that have worked so hard to make amateur boxing grow in this Province

As one who has had years of experience in boxing, it is not often that you come across men of such high calibre as Fred Richardson and Grant O'Reilly, and Oshawa is better for it and so is boxing

Hunter blasted

Sir:

I would like to make several points that Tim Bellhouse seems, in my opinion, to have left out in his rebuttal to Mary's article (25-7-73)

First of all: our generation is responsible for continuing a considerable imbalance in nature. Fur-bearing animals have been hunted so relentlessly that they are almost wiped out

The wolves he mentioned in his letter do keep a check on the deer herds by removing the old, sick, and at times the young. Mr. Bellhouse, possibly without knowing it has said that hunters do the same thing

This has got to be the most ridiculous idea I have ever heard! I can just see a hunter or a party of hunters taking the time to search out a herd of deer which is too large, or has supposedly too many old or diseased animals, then driving miles to remove these animals from the herd

The only service I know of that hunters perform for the deer is a rather unique form of birth control they shoot the buck, the doe, and fawn if they happen to find them together

Nature, if left undisturbed can and hopefully will restore the balance of all life

Mr Bellhouse mentioned that Mary should get some facts. Well, I think that if he considers what he wrote to be fact, then he is gathering his facts from the wrong sources, possibly from his friends who are the great 'deer conservationists

Rx
DID YOU GET THE FULL TREATMENT

Statistics show that approximately 17% of the prescriptions doctors write for their patients are never filled. Thus the patient never gets the result from the medicine that his doctor wanted him to have. There are several reasons why an Rx may go unfilled: doubt about why the doctor wanted him to have it in the first place; difficulty in finding a pharmacy stocking the ingredients or fear of high cost are just a few of the explanations

If for any reason you ever hesitate to have an Rx filled please check with us. Whatever the reason we welcome the opportunity to discuss it with you. We carry a complete supply of drugs

Keep those cards and letters coming say area politicians

by linda sutton

Letter writing to most people today is a drag.

They might write a few duty letters a year or run up a big long-distance phone bill.

But the federal and provincial members for Oshawa, Whitby, Ajax and Pickering often write hundreds of letters a week.

Ontario Riding MP Norm Cafik holds the record in the Durham Region. He receives about 150 letters a day, mainly from constituents.

Oshawa-Whitby MP Ed Broadbent, Ontario South MPP Bill Newman and Oshawa MPP Charlie McIlveen get roughly 100 letters a week.

But Broadbents' primary source of contact with his constituents is by way of Ma Bell, phone calls either to his Ottawa office or to the NDP community office in Oshawa.

In addition about 20 people an afternoon drop into his community office for on-the spot problem-solving.

Both the federal and provincial members say the large majority of their contacts are about personal matters - problems with workman's compensation, unemployment insurance, pension benefits, income tax, and so on.

Both Cafik and Broadbent delegate a lot of the research to their staffs. Cafik's people are located in his Ottawa office although he has a telephone service in the riding.

Broadbent has two staff people in Ottawa and two NDP-paid people working in the Oshawa office.

They follow somewhat different procedures in administering to constituent needs.

Often Broadbent's Oshawa people can handle the problem directly from that end. A few phone calls, and the matter is resolved, he says.

If a matter is more complex, if his community office people aren't satisfied with the answers they've gotten, or if the constituent is not satisfied, the MP himself steps in to see what he can do.

When letters and phone calls are received at the Ottawa office, his workers there research the matter and make recommendations about solutions which Broadbent acts upon.

While he doesn't write every letter that goes out of his office, he makes himself familiar with every situation. Again, when the office staff runs into difficulty, he acts directly on the matter himself.

Legitimate problems

"Ninety percent of the people who get in touch are entirely accurate in the sense of perceiving they have a problem," says Broadbent. "It's very encouraging that so many of them have a genuine grievance. And once the cases have been worked through we find that 80 percent of them are justified and are solved to the constituents' benefit."

Most of the cases that come into Broadbent's offices are resolved within 24 or 48 hours. A problem that is complex is first recognized by a letter of acknowledgement then followed up in detail.

Cafik's office always uses the letter of acknowledgement technique for each letter or phone call received. Then the staff goes to work to resolve the difficulty.

Cafik's assistant Ron Huck guides the staff efforts to help constituents and discusses each situation with Cafik. Cafik himself composes the letter on dictaphone for typing by one of the secretaries.

Huck aims for same-day acknowledgement of a letter.

"We often spend four hours taping letters," he says.

This is a social service job, says Huck, and Cafik's office takes on all problems. Well over half of the matters presented to Cafik are in municipal or provincial jurisdictions but his staff tackles those too.

Refers some

Broadbent, on the other hand, generally refers this kind of problem to the correct people, always assuring the constituents that he'll help out if they can't get the answer elsewhere. This way, he says, you avoid interfering with the jobs of people in other governments.

However he will sometimes handle the matter directly if he senses people feel he is giving them the run-around.

The two area MPPs are keph almost as busy with their constituency work.

Ontario South MPP Bill Newman has to combine it with being executive assistant to the minister of transportation and communications and his work as a member of the long-sitting select committee investigating the new hydro headquarters.

Oshawa MPP Charlie McIlveen works three nights a week at answering his correspondence after his legislative duties are through for the day and he gets some time away from his medical practice.

McIlveen surveyed his correspondence over a six-month period and found 75 different subject matters were covered in letters he received from constituents.

"Letterwriting doesn't bother me," he says. "It's something I've done all my life. But I sure as hell wouldn't like it if I had to write them all by hand. Nobody could read them anyway."

Newman too replies to all letters personally unless he's dealing with a write-in campaign. Then he'll compose a standard letter to be sent out in reply.

Both he and McIlveen get many inquiries about municipal and federal matters, as well as requests for help in situations that are within the purview of the provincial government.

"What bothers me most," says Newman, "are the people who want me to help them fix a parking ticket or a charge of impaired driving. You just can't pull strings like that anymore."

Well in the minority of letterwriters to their representatives are those who write to comment on government policy or party positions.

"What bothers me most," says Broadbent, "is that for every person who writes there must be 10 who get discouraged and give up before contacting us or who feel that the MP is someone up there in Ottawa lofty making laws who doesn't become involved with persona problems."

Fire prevention officer disagrees apartments are firetraps

By Garnet Cowsill
Staff Writer

A high rise apartment is safer to live in than a home, says fire prevention officer Gary Hooper

Hooper maintains there are numerous fire protective and detective devices built into modern day high rise apartment buildings that just aren't in a house

"Before any building is built, the fire department goes over the plans and initials them before a building permit can be issued," he says. "Then, after the building is constructed, we check the whole building over again."

His comments oppose the statements made in recent articles in This Week by Fire Chief Ernie Stacey, Bob Sledziewski, chief fire prevention officer, and Oshawa Alderman George Drynan, who maintain high rise buildings pose a universal hazard to tenants

The mandatory fire safety features that a developer must build into his apartment, Hooper says, include a sprinkler system in the basement or cellar area, excluding parts of these floors devoted to dwelling units, in buildings with six or more such units

Sprinklers must also be installed in the garbage room, storage room and the incinerator rooms as well as locker storage areas on any floor used by more than one occupant, and in the underground garages

Despite the fact that there are no aerial ladder trucks that could reach many suites in some of the taller high-rise apartments, one fire prevention officer says that he would much rather live in an apartment than a house. He bases this on the fact that apartments have more safety features built into them.

Added to the sprinkler system he says a standpipe and hose system must be installed in every building that is more than three storeys in height, or 45 feet above grade

The system must also be installed in buildings that are perhaps less than three storeys but have a certain measured area. For instance, it must be installed if the building is only one storey, but has an area of 20,000 square feet

The standpipe hose system, basically a hose and nozzle located on each floor, must be installed so that it can reach 95 feet in either direction If the floor is, say, 300 feet long, then there must be two located on that floor

Hooper says the pressure of the water coming from the standpipe must be maintained at 15 pounds per square inch at the top floor.

Annunciator required

Fire alarm systems must be installed in all buildings of more than three storeys or more than 12 dwelling units, he says. There must also be an annunciator which will register the location where an alarm station has been pulled so that persons responsible for the building know approximately where the fire is.

Exit signs must be installed in buildings exceeding two storeys in building height or having more than 75 bedrooms.

An emergency power supply to maintain the corridor lighting as well as the fire alarm system must be available at all times in case of fire during a power failure in buildings exceeding two storeys or having more than 50 dwelling units.

One of the more important fire safety features in a high rise, he says, is the fire resistive concrete enclosures between suites and in strategic locations in the building that provide fire spearations for from one to two hours.

Areas which require the two-hour concrete separation enclosure include incinerator rooms rooms containing fuel-fired appliances, garbage rooms where a refuse chute is used, transformer rooms

Areas requiring the one-hour separation include the service machinery room the repair shop, laundry rooms, a room with a linen chute, the trunk room, or dead storage room the janitor room, garbage room without a refuse chute and the room with an intake opening for a refuse room

Public corridors must also be separated from the remainder of the building by a fire separation at least equal to one hour

The sprinkler systems are equipped with heat sensitive detectors which not only set them off, but also start the fire alarms. In most cases the detectors are set for a temperature of, or a little more than, 165 degrees

"There must also be heat detectors at the top of the stairwells, in the elevator shafts and machine rooms and there are sprinklers in every refuse chute at every second storey and at the top and bottom," Hooper says. "We check for these during construction and once the building is complete we will go over it completely with the person responsible to ensure that the systems are working properly

Although he thinks high rise buildings are pretty safe, fire-wise, Hooper does admit that there could be better equipment installed to make them even safer, like sprinklers in every apartment, or heat detectors

"But if developers were to put these things into their apartments, you know who would end up paying for them, don't you? The tenants," he says. "I guess the ultimate would be for a heat detective mechanism to be plugged into the fire station so that if it went off we'd know right away

What builders and developers are doing wrong, he says, is allowing people to move into their buildings before they have had a post-construction check by the fire department

"What we should have in this city and don't," he says, "is some sort of occupancy bylaw which would make it illegal for anyone to move into an apartment until it has been inspected by the city building inspector and the fire department. There definitely should be something like that and I don't think any one in the fire department would argue with me"

A newly-constructed building is almost fire proof, he says It's once people move in and bring their furniture and contents into the building that it begins to become unsafe

Some people, he says, even bring their motorbikes or skidoos into the building and don't bother emptying the 50 cents worth of gas in the tanks,—a real hazard

The fire department is most willing to help and will come and lecture to tenants of high rises about safe contents, fire escape routes and, generally, fire safety

Ten years is a long time to live with a mistake.

Ten years is a long time to live with anything. But ten years is how long most carpets stay around the house.

So, given that amount of time, and the amount of money invested, you don't want to make any mistakes.

And you won't if we can help it.

Because at Carpet Land we'll make certain you get a carpet that's right for you. And right for your home.

First, we'll explain carpets. We'll tell you about the different carpet fibres, such as wool, acrilan or nylon. The different carpet constructions, such as weaving, tufting and knitting. And then we'll tell you exactly what you can expect from each.

We'll give you advice, if you want it.

If you have children at home we'll help you choose a carpet that can stand up to extra traffic and extra spills.

If you have ultra-modern furniture our interior decorator will help you choose a carpet that will suit your decor.

(With our shop-at-home service you can even choose your carpet in familiar surroundings.)

And if you have a budget we have the carpets to fit it. Because our carpets are all low-priced.

Then, when we get down to it, our carpet installers will make your carpet look as beautiful in your home as it does in the store.

So, from start to finish, nothing goes wrong. Because we look at it this way; if we don't make any mistakes, you won't.

And so far we've been looking pretty good.

Not to brag, but Carpet Land has been the only store ever to be thrice honoured by the Floor Covering Institute of Ontario.

Which means we have been recognized as exceptionally honest and professional in the business of selling carpets.

And we plan to keep it that way.

Because we want your business now, and ten year's from now.

And that doesn't leave any room for error.

Cyclists and labor are the causes of rate hikes — Aker

Durham Region car insurance rates are up, and one of the reasons is cyclists, says area insurance agent John Aker

Aker, treasurer of Schofield-Aker Limited, says he thinks there are three main reasons why insurance rates are going up, and one of them is because of the additional road hazards that bicyclists and motorcyclists present to drivers

"In most cycle-automobile accidents there is a personal injury claim brought against the insured auto driver by the cyclist," Aker says. "There is really no protection on bikes or motorbikes. It's becoming a highly dangerous mode of transportation. The personal injury claim of a bicycle rider or a motorcyclist is usually 10 times greater than that of a driver."

He says in the past five years insurance firms have had to pay off huge insurance claims to cyclists, and the only way to recoup the loss in revenue is to increase the rates.

"I know in our company that the large settlements in the last three years have involved third parties on a bike or motorbike," he says

In many cases where a bike and a car come into collision, it is difficult to determine who is at fault But since car drivers are insured and bicyclists are not, the cyclists can go to the driver's insurance company for personal injury claim

"In most cases, it doesn't really matter what the police say if the cyclist is injured," he says. "It's what the courts will establish as the injury costs."

The other two reasons for increased rates, as Aker see them, have something to do with "the basic inflationary pressures on every service and commodity in Ontario

With insurance rates increasing again, there may be a few Durham Region residents next winter who feel that it makes better financial sense to travel by dogteam.

The average hourly rate for labor on car repairs is higher than it was a year ago, he says, and this has a direct bearing on the insurance hikes because insurance companies are paying more out honoring claims and therefore have to recover the money through rate increases

The hourly labor rate in Oshawa on the average is about $12," he says "On top of that many repair shops are becoming unionized

The same applies to the continuing increase in the price of car parts he says

Whenever the UAW is successful in negotiating a new contract there is a corresponding price change in goods," he claims

These factors are all influencing the rate increase for an insured driver over 21 years of age But, oddly enough, the rates for younger drivers have gone down

"I think there are basically two reasons why the teenager's insurance rates have gone down," says Aker. "One is pressure, if you like, from the general public on insurance firms to reduce those rates and the other is that a lot of drivers were not carrying insurance on their cars

Young drivers were not carrying insurance, he says, because of the high rates they had to pay. So, to encourage them to take out coverage, insurance companies have lowered their rates

The insurance rate increases, handed down by the Canadian Underwriters' Association, the largest single association representing insurance firms in the country, are effective as of August 1, he says

"No one firm has to really accept these figures," Aker says. "The association gives no real reason why the rates went up although they are probably basing them on statistically compiled loses insurance companies have been experiencing recently."

Is the church negative?

By Rev. John A. Robb

The church, in the broad sense, is considered by some to major in the negative.

The critic points out that eight of the 10 commandments are negative and that the church is mainly concerned with ruining the spirit of our youth with its restraints.

It should be said at the outset that wherever there is a thesis there will of necessity be an anti-thesis. The thesis in the case of the 10 commandments is set forth in Matthew, Chapter 22 Verses 37-39 as follows:

"Thou shalt love the Lord they God with all they heart, and with all they soul and with all they mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it: "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as theyself"

The anti-thesis is the decalogue. Inasmuch as there is no limit to the positive while there is to the negative, the latter should obviously be clearly deliniated It is so with the laws of the land

With regard to conveying the negative to our teens, I prefer, rather than listing a number of things as negative, to give scriptural guidelines in order that a teen of average intelligence can made his own decision as to the things which he will do and the places to which he will or will not go

On this basis I would then say: "Avoid anything that would contribute to (1 John 2 vs. 16) the lust of the flesh (physical and sexual indulgence), the lust of the eyes (grasping for material things) or the pride of life (an independent spirit instead of dependence on Christ)".

Avoid thinking about anything that would be condemned by Philippians 4, verse 8: "Things that are true, honest just, pure, lovely, of good report, think on these things".

In other words pour all that you propose to read or to view through the filter paper of Philippians 4, Verse 8 and act positively only on that which comes through the test!

Avoid saying anything to anyone that would make it harder for you to talk to them about Christ in the future. (James Chaper 3).

Within these guidelines we ought, as born-again believers (if so be that you are), to be able to sit in judgment on our own behavioral patterns rather than having someone dictate the specific negatives

There are certain habits which the Christian chooses to avoid because they are harmful to the body which is the temple of the holy Spirit or because they dull the conscience to moral convictions and to the voice of the Holy Spirit through the spiritually-sensitized conscience.

While it is comfortable theology to say "emphasize the positive and the negative will take care of itself", the fact is that because of the gravitational force caused by sin, it does not!

Hence in most of the six chapter epistles of Paul, there are spent on the positive and three on the negative

The Switzer Brothers, a gospel quartet, proved popular with the crowds at the Whitby County Town Carnival over the weekend. Many in the audience joined in to sing the various familiar songs.

BEREAN BRIEFS

Paul's all day testimony in Rome ended the first course of his ministry. Up till that time he had been proclaiming the kingdom to Jew first and then to Gentile. This kingdom gospel was a part of the dispensation of promise which began in Ge 12 with the call of Abraham. It primarily had to do with the millennial reign of Christ here on the earth. This was to begin with His coming with clouds of angels and the rapture of Israel up into the air. There is no reference in the Scriptures to a rapture of the church Those who are caught up into the air to meet the Lord come back to earth as He comes and so spend the millennium with Him here on earth

Upon Israel's rejection of the King and the kingdom in Ac 28, the offer of the kingdom was terminated, and the dispensation of the mystery started. It started with a special dispensation of grace being given to Paul to proclaim it He claimed that he was made a special minister of the dispensation of the mystery according to the gift of the grace of God given unto him (not to others) A part of this ministry was to preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ, to make all men see what is the dispensation of the mystery, and even to make known to principalities and powers in the heavenlies the manifold wisdom of God

Paul told the Colossians that he was made a minister of the church by a dispensation of God, given to him (not to others) Also he claimed to have the distinction of finishing the Word of God In spite of this many think that John finished the canon

Paul claimed that his mystery had been hid in God from ages and generations The glory of this mystery was to be among the Gentiles not the Jews

Christendom, in general, denies the claims of Paul and the inspiration of the Scriptures which testify of the mystery The apostasy which Paul had foretold has set in long ago and holds Christendom fast in its clutches today

Now in the dispensation of promise, there were synagogues and assemblies which were called churches These were local assemblies Seldom was the whole spoken of as a church But with the coming in of the dispensation of the mystery, there is one body or church. This is not the property or a chattel of Christ as you find in 1Co 12. It is His own body of which He is the Head This is a relationship never before mentioned or known

But there is another and most important distinction that must be made here. The church which is the body of Christ and of which He is the Head has its citizenship in heavenly places, is blest with all spiritual blessings there, and hopes to be manifested with the Lord there This is far different from and higher than anything that had ever been revealed before So the great difference between the two dispensations is the place of their hope: one on the earth, and the other in the heavenlies

Then the most common question that follows is How can one join this great church? Simply believe the gospel concerning it, and God will join you to it This is set forth in Eph 2:8-10.

Predjudice rears its ugly head

By John Bell
Staff Writer

Oshawa, your prejudice is showing

A survey of Oshawa's black population done by an area teacher who asked that her name not be mentioned, has indicated that contrary to what some may think, there is prejudice in this city

The survey, being compiled by the teacher for a university paper, holds comments from a cross-section of the city's black population which say that prejudice in Oshawa is more of the "subtle" nature

The reason for this subtle approach, says the survey, is possibly because many whites feel the majority of blacks in the city are skilled or professional people and present no burden to the taxpayer, and so "it's alright to accept them

One black woman mentioned in the survey who worked for a white family said that thoughshe had a good job, she felt exploited in the sense that although she lived at her place of employment she did not feel part of the family

Teenagers interviewed indicated they had run into prejudice on numerous occasions from both their fellow students and from teachers

Others interviewed felt that if they looked for signs of prejudice it was there but if they did not and maintained an outgoing attitude all was well

The survey also sighted isolated incidents of black couples or families being turned down because of their color when trying to rent apartments or homes

The teacher, doing the survey, maintains that these comments and others tell only part of the story

Those wishing to state their opinions on whether or not there is prejudice to blacks or any other nationalities in this city are asked to send their comments to This Week, 390 King Street West, in Oshawa

I saw him yestermorning
A perched on the ground
And after Winter's rages
There was a
There was not a morsel found
--Except the human kindness
That kept him staying 'round
He braved the mighty torrents
Of breath and of sigh
But only when I approached
Did he take to wing and fly
If man should live till eternity
(I often stop and think)
Will he a part of nature be
Or she a part of him?
Or will we still be as shallow
In our hearts and in our minds?

To be worthy

Oh life, let me be aware of the Strenght you bring. Let my eyes
Seek out in you, all that is good and true; for ther is such evil.
Oh Life, give these hands the will to write your words of wisdom, so that all mankind may benefit from your knowledge!
Oh Life, let my lips not tremble
when I try to speak your words of truth, for my fellow man is in need of hearing of the many blessings you bring!
And, Oh Life, let my whole being experience the greatness of your presence, so that I may one day raise my hands to the skies; and thank God!
that I am truly worthy of your existance!

Time

Today
a silence was spoken
It touched close to my heart, it singed my soul
and was part of me Yesterday
it would have passed me left me cold, had no meaning

will it happen?
come to me?
be part of me
as it is today?

Plight of the unwed mother

By Mary Margaret Allen

Picture the situation, a young girl, unmarried has discovered that she is pregnant

She has several things she could do. She could run away from home so her parents would not know or she could attempt to abort the fetus with various items

If she decides against these she might attempt suicide because of her feelings of guilt and rejection by her friends and parents

Well, she faces the fact that her parents must know, so she tells them Being a parent and naturally concerned with their daughter they immediately ask, "What will the neighbors think?"

Along with that question they feel intense emotions the main one being hatred towards their daughter for doing such a thing and the boy that got her 'into trouble

The next step is to decide what to do with this wayward child If they are smart enough they could plan some devious method of having the girl go away and then return after the child is born and then say that they had adopted a new baby

Or else they could send her to a home that was especially built for the unwed mother So far the neighbors have been taken care of. They will think that the girl has gone to some special school or something to that effect

The parents can now feel relieved because they won't have to worry about gaining a bad reputation

But someone has been omitted -- The supposed criminal-the black sheep or more commonly known as the unwed mother. People don't seem to think too much about her and the way she feels

Chances are she didn't want to get into this situation, or perhaps she was using pregnancy as a means of gaining more attention or a way of getting out of the house

At any rate, I feel that the young women should not be forced into a 'shotgun wedding'. Many parents think that this would be the best thing to do. According to statistics it is just about the worst The percentage of divorces among teenage marriages is very high

Since society in general thinks it is a crime to have a child without having the little piece of paper called a marriage certificate, the girl needs help -- the kind that is offered by specially trained individuals

These people work in maternity homes. Here she can continue with her schooling if she wishes Others prefer a home in the city where they can do light housework to support themselves

This type of place enables her to visit her family more often

After the baby has been born there arises another problem'. Should she give up her child or keep him? Most girls are not emotionally capable of taking care of the child and some are afraid of taking on the responsibility.

In a great majority of the cases she puts her child up for adoption. A few however, decide they want to keep the infant. Society as usual looks down over its giant proboscis at her with a frown. I think that if she wants to have her child to take care of, it's great!

If we weren't so bent on condemning people all the time, then the unwed mothers wouldn't have to leave school or work

sportsweek

Sid and Carol Dodsworth are the defending mixed doubles champs at the Oshawa Tennis Club. The Dodsworths find tennis a real togetherness sport as even their children have become very involved. Tennis is becoming ever more popular in the Durham region.

Dodsworth shines on the tennis courts

Tennis is booming in Oshawa with more than 600 players registered playing this summer

It seems almost everybody is picking up the racket and whacking that little ball around

Looking at it from another angle, the old standbys are still playing and they remember the good old days when tennis wasn't really the thing to do

Sid and Carol Dodsworth defending mixed doubles champions at the Oshawa Tennis club, are probably the best mixed pairs combination in the province today. They've been touring the courts for over a decade now

Both take the game very seriously and are consistent performers they are one of many husband and wife combinations at the club

Others include Dalphe and Ken Ives, Ray and Wilma Petre, Len and June Beeston, Jim and Dorothy McDonald, just to mention a few.

Carol and Sid practise or play about five times a week and it isn't uncommon to see Sid playing on the courts every morning about 7 a.m. Sid was first introduced to the game by a few of his chums and he later talked his wife into the game

They lived in Paloalto, California for a couple of years and played a lot of tennis there where the game is very big The Dodsworth's are currently enjoying a holiday in South Hampton, and , of course they've taken along their tennis rackets and plan to play every day at the nearby club

Both of their oldest children, Joel, 11, and Jeff, 8, are active members of the junior program while Robin, age 4, is just learning to swing the racket

Carol credits Sid as a big help in teaching her the finer points of the game. "He really knows the game says Carol, "however on some occasions at the start it was like teaching me how to drive and Sid did get upset. One thing we do is don't get upset with each other. If we make a mistake we leave it on the courts and never take it home with us."

Sid is the captain of the team in the inter-county major league after capturing the championship last year The team is currently a few points from first place

Besides being top tennis players, the entire family are ardent skiers during the winter. Young Jeff suffered a mishap last winter and broke his leg. But it hasn't hampered his game this year

Oshawa Tony's Stats prepared by Bob Wing

This Week to prove CAN fight city hall

The big bats on the shoulders of the This Week softball team will be swinging from the heels come next Tuesday night in the benifit softball game at Alexandra Park against City Hall No-Stars

Last winter, you may remember, we whipped the City Hallers 3-2 in hockey and now they're back for another licking from the Scribes

The game, of course, is for fun with the big winner being the local firefighters and their pet charity, muscular dystrophy

Sure, we've heard a lot of talk from the city hall player-coach-catcher Bruce MacArthur about their secret practice sessions and how they are going to lick us, but coach Peter Brouwer of This Week and his diamond dandies don't go around bragging about their skills and will let the scoreboard do thetalkingfor them

Brouwer has released part of his line-up for next Tuesday's game which is part of a double-header as the regular Ontario Fastball League game between Tony's and Burlington at 8.30 p m

At present, Jim Shaw will be the backstop, and with City Hall trying to score runs, big Jim will be able to stop them with some flying tackles

Our new editor, one Tom Douglas beard and all will be working at first base Bob Burr from CKLB has been brought in to patrol second base While Linda Sutton who has been chasing her youngster around the house, should be in shape to play short

John Muha, always on run at the paper, will patrol third base, and in the outfield, where we really shine with speed, Patti O'Neil, Louise Kirkup and John Bell will play left field because they're there any way all the time

Doug Cook will be our designated hitter with Gale Neault set to be the bat girl. Her job is to keep City Hall away from the base paths with her female charm

Coaches on the base paths are Brouwer and George Leslie As you will note, we haven t named our pitcher yet as Brouwer won't release his name until just before game time However, he is twice the pitcher that the City Hall has imported in Norm Bagnell

Jim Sabyan will also be in attendance acting as social director for This Week Superstars

Milosh has all-star wrestling card set

It looks as if promotor Pat Milosh will be running a beauty contest rather than a professional wrestling match next Monday night at the Auditorium

Two of the top beauties in professional wrestling today, Susay Green from Corpus Christi, Texas, will do battle with Paulla Kay, a native of Oklahoma City

This bout is only a semi-final match and Milosh has also secured Paul DeMarco, holder of seven regional U.S. state titles meeting the U.S. title holder, Tiger Jeet Singh

This is a return match as DeMarco recorded a victory over Singh and the "Tiger" has requested a rematch in Oshawa from Milosh who has granted his wish

This should be a real thriller for the fans The sweet one, Sweet Daddy Siki, meets the Masked Marvel in another main event bout

Popular Tony Parisi teams up with Dominic Denucci in a tag-team affair against the Golden Cgreen Chris Tolos and Hans Schmidt. The Opener has the Beast going against the Executioner

Advance tickets are on sale now at the Aud

"Windy" McArthur makes idle threats about softball match

By Bruce McArthur

When your city council softball team took a crash course on getting into shape something had to happen and it did

After the first practice the mayor's throwing arm came up with strained muscles and Alderman Cliff Pilkey crashed to the ground after he hauled in a long fly on the dead run and didn't move

It only turned out to be a ruptured union card and loss of wind The rest of council wound up stiff and sore but with more practices scheduled they should be in great shape on game night

Most people are correct in thinking that a politician s jaw muscle are always in shape - some more than others

The starting lineup on the infield is set with Jim Pottieary on first Alan Pilkey at second Jack Wiley at third and big John McLaughlin at short stop with yours truly catching

The outfield is not set as yet but DeHart, Breaugh Drynan Dewar and Berwick are still giving it their best shot

We brought in a special coach to help round out the rough edges and George Linthol of the Oshawa Minor Softball C K L B Juveniles has helped the team immenvely

The big thrill or the fans will be Norm Bagnel who ranked as Ontario's number one softball pitcher for over 20 years and in working Norm into shape I must say that today Norm could still play for any team in Ontario he wished to

He still has the control and speed that made him famous and he once was awarded the Most Valuable Pitcher in the World Softball Tournament while pitching for Oshawa Tony's 10 years ago at Rock Island

I hear that This Week are trying to bring in some top athletes to try and stave off defeat so the real winner will be softball fans and the Oshawa Firefighters Muscler Dystrophy fund

Be there on game night and cheer your City Council on to victory over the bad guys next Tuesday night

Game time is 7:15 but get there early for the warmup and assure yourself of a seat

Big Mac is one of Canada's best

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

When it comes to lawn bowling, a bowler's biggest complaint is the lack of coverage given the sport by the media.

Either professional sports receive all the attention, or the coverage is given amateur events like golf, hockey, ball, lacrosse football

And it's odd because Oshawa boasts one of Canada's top lawn bowlers Gord MacMillian

"Mac", competed in the worlds championship last spring in Pretoria, South Africa and was selected along with Bruce Mathison of British Columbia to represent Canada in the championship with 14 other countries

MacMillian, 40, now has a distinguished record behind him in the sport Despite finishing with a 6-win 6-defeat, 1-tie record in South Africa where lawn bowling is a big sport, he feels that the Oshawa club is one of the best in Canada despite a mini-membership of just more than 200

Compare this total elsewhere in Canada where only about 10,000 play the game in South Africa over 40 000 play, and in Australia over 250,000 take part in the sport England and Ireland are also big supporters of the sport

Besides taking part in the Canadian championship MacMillian's biggest thrill came in 1966 when he captured the Canadian championship at 33, winning all seven games he played in

He first gained an interest in lawn bowling from his parents, Sam now 80, and his mother, Ethel, 78 both who are still active with the club today

Gord will be in action today at the lawn bowling club playing with his father, Jack Hunter and Bill Tewksbury from Clearwater, Florida, who came in for the annual General Motors Gold Cup match at the club

A total of 64 teams representing all parts of Ontario have entered the one-day championship

MacMillian says youngsters are not that interested in the sport even though Toronto has a junior program going on Kew Beach which seems to be very popular

Gord also enjoys curling during the winter and plays a little golf, but lawn bowling is his first love

He says lawn bowling and curling are a similar sport involving strategy and concentration.

A lawn bowler for 22 years, MacMillan is a real treat to watch and fans are reminded of the Gold Cup action today where they can witness a former Canadian champ in action His rink won the title back in 1965

Don Hedges of Ajax calls the shot in a lawn bowling tournament held at the Whitby Lawn Bowling Club on Brock Street during the Whitby County Town Carnival over the weekend. Hedges, along with a number of other enthusiasts will be taking park in the General Motors Gold Cup match today.

Hockey school is a big success

Oshawa's try at a summer hockey school is a success story

Five former members of the Oshawa Generals, along with two members of the American Hockey League Hershey Bears, Hugh Harvey and Larry Bignell, are in town coaching the lakeshore area youngsters in the fundamentals of the game

The ex-Gens are Jack Lynch, Steve Cardwell, Billy Yeo, Hank Nowak and Ted McComb. Cardwell, who purchased a house in Oshawa earlier this spring, is the spokesman for the group and he claims that this year should be a losing deal as far as the school is concerned, but predicts, a bright future in the years to come

Cardwell who just recently jumped to the World Hockey Association Minnesota Fighting Saints after a couple seasons with the Pittsburg Penguins feels that the Oshawa school will give the youngsters more personal attention than the majority of hockey schools

"We only want about 25 kids out to each session, he says. "This will allow each instructor to have only about four or five boys each and they will be receiving personal attention to parts of the game."

Cardwell speaks with plenty of authority having been an instructor in summer schools for the past four years

The school has a lot of experience in teaching youngsters. Lynch, for example, has worked at Bobby Orr's school in Orillia. Harvey has taught in Kingston, Bignell in Edmonton, and Yeo, who recently signed a three-year contract with the St. Louis Blues, has worked with many American youngsters, while Nowak and McComb have taught at various schools

Cardwell is trying to line up Boston Bruins rightwinger Terry O'Reilly and 50-goal scorer Rich McLeish from the Philadephia Flyers to make guest appearances

There are still a few openings left the next two weeks. Youngsters should contact Bill Sytnyk at 728-8138 or drop into the school at Harman Park

Meet Bob Solomon of Oshawa Tony's

When Tony's formed as a Senior "A" Fastball team in 1968 one of the major players they went after was Bob Solomon

To build a club, you must have a take-charge player, and "Sully", who had five years experience as a junior with Scugog Cleaners and in 1967 was a key member of Pam International, is one of those types

Solomon is now in his fifth season with the ball club and has helped Tony's capture two Ontario championships, move into Canadian finals at Halifax in 1969, win an Ontario Michigan crown, take a pair of City & District titles as well as the Beaches loop on two other occasions

Most of the attention goes towards the pitchers on the club, but Solomon is the guy who calls all the shots" from behind the plate, and if you ask any pitcher on the club they'll say he's the reason why Tony's are leaders in the Ontario Fastball League

Barry Tumbers and Paul Wannamaker with sparkling ERA's of .063 and .089 respectively claim they owe their success to the key backstop, Bob Solomon

A married man with one child, Patti, and another onthe way, Solomon says, his lovely wife, Myrna, is also a top ball player in her own right and plays in the local ladies every Monday night

Despite the fact Tony's have two backstops, Sully always seems to have the number one job and does the catching in all the important games. He has beaten off Paul Parkinson, Robbie Anderson and Walt Grabko for the number-one job in earlier years, and this season the 29-year-old is being pushed by a brash young rookie Roy Graham

Last year was his greatest season being named the club's most valuable player and had his biggest campaign at the plate, batting a nifty .301

He feels if he can bat .250 he's had a good season as the teams always meet the top pitchers game after game. At present Bob is batting .213

Despite the fact he works shiftwork which hampers his playing, he stays in shape by toiling with Kisil Fuels in the U.A.W league while on nights

Wannamaker credits Solomon for making him a standout chucker this year

Bob took away the windup from Wannamaker which gave the big righthander better control

A student of the game, Sully is always studying the opposition and has a good inside book on all the opposition weak spots.

He considers Peter Landers, a former Tony's ace now with Toronto Globals, as the finest pitcher he has ever caught for but remarks that both Wannamaker and Timbers aren't that far behind

His younger brother Phil, the club's team captain is a teammate of his and they are dead look-alikes on the field Tony's have an ace in Bob Solomon one of the smartest catchers in Canada today.

Bond of communication exists between Spruce Villa band and audience

By Jane Milne
Staff Writer

It was obvious last week at the Spruce Villa Hotel in Whitby that the five musicians entertaining enjoyed themselves as much as did their audience.

One of the best known and most popular groups to appear in southern Ontario, Bond lives up to its name with a bond-like feeling of communication between them and the crowd.

The musicians give a good feeling to an audience since it is clear that they enjoy their work and reach continually for higher levels of musical quality.

Guitarist and vocalist John Roles, drummer Jeff Hamilton, vocalist and bassist Bill Dunn, pianist and guitarist Ted Trenholm, and lead guitarist Alex MacDougall blend their own original music with true sounds of the early Beatles up to Sergeant Pepper and include also in the act comedy parodies which bring back memories of the Beach Boys, Jerry and the Pacemakers and the Four Seasons

Rarely is such a combination of versatility seen with talented and sensitive musicians in their own right, giving justice to Lennon and McCartney, showing a good sense of timing in the comedy segments while promising good things to come in the form of unique original music

Tour planned

The 2-½ year-old group which has spent most of the last couple of years – except for a break-up which lasted six months, working bars and hotels – plans a tour in the fall which will take in colleges in the United States as well as other provinces in Canada

"We will also go into rehearsal soon for our rock opera, The Wizard, in preparation for the stage," says Bill

Bill played previously in England with such groups as the Searchers and Jerry and the Pacemakers Alex, whose father is a well known guitarist, has jammed and done one-nighters with some of the top American groups

Each member of the Toronto based group is very much an individual but they agree that the kinds of music and musicians they admire include the Beatles, and John McLaughlin, Yes, and Santana

"We don't do songs by all of these artists, but we are working up to their level so we can eventually," says Bill

It isn't often that they get the chance to go to concerts and hear in person other musicians but when they can get the time they do

"That's a real drag when you're in this business says John "You don't get the chance to see other performers

Like to record

Having reached success on the hotel circuit, where they fill the rooms they play to capacity, Bond is striving to make a recording

"That is what we are working like crazy for says Bill "We're trying to get a song which will please a recording company. The crowds I think we can please

Although the Canadian Radio and Television Commission's (CRTC) rulings concerning Canadian content in the media has not had an effect on the group's recording efforts, they hope the upcoming tour and opera will bring the needed attention from the recording industry

Three members of the group write and we would like to record our own music," says Bill

There are just so many bands around all trying to record " says Ted "Some members of other Canadian groups who have made it try to help but it is still very slow

They agree that playing in hotels has been good for them, allowing them to build up a reputation which no longer requires them to prove themselves to hotel managers

We don't have to audition any more although some managers can be very trying at times, says Bill "One of the best hotel managers of any hotel in Ontario we've played is Harry of the Spruce Villa in Whitby

Some of the audiences Bond has played to since they started performing have included some pretty tough ones with fights breaking out and glasses and bottles flying through the air

We used to just keep playing," says Ted, "but now, if a fight were to start, we would stop

When the moon is full

Alex says it is always a good sign though, when the crowd is noisy

You should hear them when there's a full moon," he says, "When we were playing the Penthouse Hotel (in Highland Creek), the people were dancing on the tables when the moon was full."

The group says they all like the business they are in and plan to stay in it

We meet a lot of really good dudes in the business," says John "We always get along with the other bands Most of them are really friendly

The impression many people outside the music business have that musicians use drugs is untrue says Jeff Hamilton

There is no more drug use among musicians than in any other profession, he says "It's hard work, harder than it looks We can't be on drugs because we work six nights a week then there's our travelling time: the group practices twice a week, there's our own personal practice, and the upkeep of our equipment."

If enjoying your work, working heard at it and having respect for audiences, management and other musicians has anything to do with it, plus talent, Bond will surely findits rightful place in the Canadian music scene

Rod Crawford, owner of the Little Winemaker shop in Oshawa, says more and more people are making their own wine these days due to the high cost of imported wines. He says that with proper attention to detail, the amateur winemaker can come close to the taste of some of the imported varieties.

Wine costs offset by bottling your own

By Linda Sutton
Staff Writer

Making your own wine is probably the second-cheapest way to avoid paying the ever-increasing prices of imported wines.

The cheapest answer is, of course to stop drinking it.

The impact of the wine-price hike hasn't really affected the business of stores that sell wine making supplies says Rod Crawford owner of the Little Winemaker on the corner of Bond and Gladstone in Oshawa.

Summer is the slowest season says Crawford and the price increase has just begun to be felt.

Crawford has been making wine for three years and opened his specialty shop a year and a half ago. Last year he taught a course in winemaking at Durham College.

He's an enthusiastic winemaker and will compare his products to any of the classic varieties.

Price is a big factor too. A bottle of make-your own dry red from good concentrates costs 30 to 40 cents a bottle compared with $4 or $5 for the storebought stuff.

About $22 would equip the novice to start with although more expensive gadgets are available says Crawford.

Winemaking, he says, can be as simple as baking a cake or as complicated as you want to make it.

All wine stores sell paperbacks with tips on winemaking and the library is well stocked with books on the topic.

One of the best books he says is written by a Canadian. The Art of Making Wine by Stanley F. Anderson. It sells for $1.95.

Crawford recommends high-quality wine grape concentrates or fruit concentrates for fruit wines but it is possible to make wine out of anything in your garden he says.

To start with, the winemaker needs a large plastic pail for mixing a closed container with a valve to relieve the pressure and several other containers to hold the wine during the various stages of maturating and before bottling.

He begins by mixing the ingredients - concentrate sugar yeast and acid are the main ones according to the recipe, in the large plastic pail. The wine will sit in the pail fermenting for about a week. Then it is syphoned into a closed container with a valve to relieve the pressure. Then the wine is syphoned from container to container for three or four months until it is ready for bottling.

No special temperature conditions are needed except that during fermentation the wine should be kept around 70 degrees to stimulate the process. After fermenting the wine should be kept at cooler temperatures such as are available in a basement.

The winemaker doesn't need elaborate facilities just a few square feet in the kitchen for mixing and a little storage space says Crawford.

One of the keys to making good wine is not to be too eager to try it out he advises. Fruit wines should age three to four months in the bottle. Red wines about 12 to 18 months, white wines a bit less.

"A lot of people make the mistake of drinking their wine too soon and are disappointed with the results" he say.

Crawford also stresses the importance of sterilizing equipment and preventing bacteria from coming into contact with the wine, since exposure to bacteria changes the taste for the worse.

He recommends making five gallons of wine at a time.

That seems like a lot he says but when you make your own you drink wine more frequently. Besides it seems like a waste of time and effort to make only a gallon.

A gallon will yield about six bottles of wine.

Crawford himself didn't drink wine when he started to make it as a hobby. "Now I have a hard time keeping up with the consumption" he says.

A couple of years ago, says the wine store owner teachers and doctors dominated the home winemaking field. Now everyone does it.

Winemakers fall into two categories - the hobbyists and the winedrinkers looking for an inexpensive way to supply their demand. Few real wines take it up, though, says Crawford. Most enthusiasts enjoy both the end product and the hobby aspect of making wine.

The experienced winemaker can produce a good champagne or a high quality wine comparable to that on the liquor store shelves Crawford believes.

The whole thing is an enjoyable learning experience.

The amateur winemaker has some legal requirements. Ontario law limits production of 200 bottles a year in the home and the winemaker can't take his wine off the premises or give it away. He should let the LCBO know what he's doing, advises Crawford.

To produce home-made beer, he must get a licence from the customs and excise people at city hall, he says.

Violations come under the Liquor Control Act, which is designed to prohibit bootlegging and illegal manufacture of liquor for sale, not to thwart the efforts of the man who enjoys making wine for his own consumption, says Crawford.

He hopes in the future some changes in the law will be made to ease the situation.

"Winemaking has a lot of satisfactions, he says. "It just requires time and patience and a little bit of work.

Markson calls for quick action to get region on the right track

By Linda Sutton
Staff Writer
Writer

Regional government could result in a whole new look in civic administration says Oshawa city treasurer Frank Markson

Both the regional council and the individual municipal councils now have the opportunity to take advantage of new management techniques that may result in more effective government says Markson who is sort of a municipal philosopher and a serious student of municipal systems

Markson himself has been called a prime candidate for the regional treasurer s job or for the position of regional administrator He admits he's interested

But his overriding concern is that Oshawa and the region capitalize on the introduction of the new governmental structure by introducing advanced administratives systems designed to stimulate policy making and to foster interdepartmental teamwork

He would like to see the strengthening of elected representatives or the mayor s office by the build-up of a support and research staff independent of municipal administrative duties

This team would be trained in taking an overall viewpoint of the city or the region judging outputs of existing policies and helping the elected officials to design new policies aimed at achieving an established goal for community living

They would he says assist the elected people in assessing recommendations of administrative personnel and would be free to do some conceptual thinking about the gaps in municipal or regional service to the public

Flexible approach

The city treasurer also urges a flexible but cohesive approach to municipal administration

The "bright young people' in each department should be moved around to other departments on a regular basis to help them develop a broad insight into the total operation

This would help to decompartmentalize city hall and bring decisions in all administrative areas into a unified framework, says Markson

Oshawa is naturally going to be the major force within the region initially he says, because it is the only one of the eight local municipalities making up the region that has a large and complex administrative system

Frank Markson calls for an independent survey to determine the best people for the various administrative jobs in the new region.

However, he urges the regional council to move quickly from its election to establish the region and its administration as a unifying force, to provide expertise and services that the other seven municipalities can t provide independently

Markson refers to the internal administrative services such as purchasing, computer services, systems and procedures analysis and so on

This central system would quickly permit the other municipalities to reach a level of administrative sophistication that Oshawa already has in the technical sense

The approach, he says, should go a long way toward establishing a common spirit among the municipalities and would downplay Oshawa's dominance of the region that so many of the others fear

Centralize services

The regional council should have adopted the policy of centralization of services from the start although there could well be an interregnum for some of the less immediately evident areas, says Markson

For example he says, it is of utmost importance that the region organize an effective planning mechanism from day one But at the same time it should make very clear to the member municipalities that it will take over other technical administrative functions within a couple of years

This would avoid the problem experienced in other regions where many responsibilities are left at the local level initially and then assumed by the region as it gains strength says the city treasurer

The take-over of areas of responsibility resulted in friction between the regional and local councils, he says

Markson in fact advises thah the regional council and chairman take a very hardnosed and professional view of the regional structure

Instead of trying to adapt existing systems to the regional level he recommends the hiring of a management consultant firm to devise a modern and effective regional administration

Free of pressure

This kind of an outside view would be free from the political pressures that would influence internal decisions on management structures

The whole idea, he says, is to maximize the efforts of the elected people to help them play a real role in the formulation of policies guiding the development of all aspects of regional services and to train the administration as a team in following through the wishes of council

Fanfare costs, but it was fun

It cost the city 20 cents for each of the 93 000 citizens who participated in Fanfare says Mayor Jim Potticary

At the last Fanfare committee meeting the $55 000 statement of expenditures and revenues which showed a $20 448 deficit to the city was adopted

The statement will now go to the board of control and finally to council for their approval

The luncheon meeting Friday also dissolved the whole committee by motion of its members which included the social services committee members

Council had originally budgeted $55 000 to the committee in hopes that Fanfare passport and medallion sales would not only offset the total expenditures but would also create enough revenue to help build up city amateur recreation facilities

Although revenue from passport and medallion sales is still to come into the city the statement thus far shows that less than $55,000 was recouped from the scheme

The biggest expense to the committee was close to $26 000 paid to REJ Promotions Limited to advertise the event and print the various stickers and an overabundance (205 000) of passports REJ also took care of getting the 50 000 medallions made up

According to the incomplete statement only 46 500 passports were sold and only 17 000 medallions An addendum to the statement does say however that 9 027 medallions are still unaccounted for

At the meeting it was noted that more than 93 000 citizens and visitors attended Fanfare events

The city has been tested before on its maturity, but I think Fanfare was its final test, the mayor says "Ninety-three thousand citizens joined together in one giant celebration I agree that the committee made some mistakes but they were small I congratulate all the citizens who participated

Terry Kelly former chairman of the committee until a sudden illness put the event in the hands of the social services committee attended the meeting

I am well again maybe dangerously well some say he told the committee The doctors told me I had an overactive thyroid but I feel better now You people were towers of strength for me You did a tremendous job

Kelly advocates that a fanfare celebration such as the one that just passed become an annual event perhaps as a 'hullabaloo before the annual Autofest celebrations

Playing soldier fun, but it's a lot of work

By Tom Douglas
Editor

The sweat was pouring down my face and I was taking big gasps of air

It was so pitch-black out that I could barely make out the three shapes moving ahead of me Without warning, I walked into the branches of a pine tree scratching my face and knocking my glasses to the ground

Just ahead someone whispered that we had to climb an old wooden fence I got half-way over and fell on my head pulling some of the old timber with me and causing a racket like a pistol shot

Never again, I vowed would I make a smart crack about grown men playing soldier when I saw a convoy of Ontario Regiment trucks and jeeps drive by. This was damned hard work

My second vow was that I would do something about the lousy shape too many months sitting behind a desk had put me in

Actually the whole situation was the fault of Jim Sabyan our photo editor He once belonged to the regiment and still has a number of friends there So when one of them mentioned last week that he'd be taking a group of summer militia students on an overnight exercise near Bethany Sabe opened his big mouth

Tell you what Nicholson he said What do you say Douglas here and I raid them and really scare the hell out of them

Before I could interject with a tale about a slipped disc or flat feet Captain Richard Nicholson allowed as how this was a terrific idea and he and Sabe were making plans

So at 7 45 p m on that evening at 1945 hours last Thursday night a driver and jeep were at our disposal and we were on our way to Bethany One concession I had gained was that we could also take along Brian Evans a former jungle warfare instructor in the American Army

Captain Richard Nicholson of the Ontario Regiment (right) holds a Sterling submachine gun on Editor Tom Douglas while a soldier frisks him. Members of This Week participated in an exercise last Thursday evening near Bethany in which they raided members of the regiment's student militia who were on a training exercise.

I figured if we were going to sneak up on 30 cadets with rifles even if they did only contain blanks we could use all the help we could get

So there we were sneaking up on the group about as quietly as a herd of elephants browsing through a stand of sugar cane Even the boots I had been issued squeaked so I very stupidly took them off and walked for a bit in my sock feet It's a good thing I don't type with my toes because the blisters I have today would make it rather difficult

We had driven to within two miles of the camp the group had set up and then it was necessary to walk the rest of the way cross-country

Each of us had been issued a Sterling submachine gun and we were to share 400 rounds of ammunition You have no idea how fast 400 round of ammunition goes when three trigger happy individuals are sharing it

I can't remember just exactly who fired the first shot or when but even with blanks it was a heart-stopping moment. Lord knows how these people do it when it's live ammo and real enemy soldiers that they're facing

The next several hours are a blur in my mind, but with highlights that stand out - the smell of cordite the guttlightening feeling of having an "enemy" patrol pass so close to you that they almost step on your boots the ease with which Evans crawled into the bush and kept coming back with prisoners like a water spaniel retrieving ducks

There were some funny incidents as well Sabe who prides himself on being a good soldier, jumped about five feet in the air and opened up with a long burst of his SMG at a fellow lying in the grass at his feet who had started to say "Don't shoot, I'm one of the umpires"

The fellow must still be seeing flashes and hearing a ringing noise in his ears

Then there was the group of student soldiers who ran out of ammo and as we walked by yelled "Bang, bang, you're dead, sir"

There was a very surprised farmer who came driving along the road where the battle was raging and came to an abrupt halt as Sabe stepped out in front of him with his gun

He turned out to be a good head and allowed the two of us to ride in the back as he drove through the "enemy" lines and we were able to wipe out quite a few of them

And there was the delicious taste of what I would normally consider rather blah canned stew after the whole affair was over You sure work up a hunger (and thirst) during a battle. This second want was satisfied by some of Molson's finest, courtesy of the men

I might add here that male chauvinism is still part and parcel of the Canadian Army The stew was cooked on a portable stove by the two female members of the outfit

Anyway, the entire exercise was great fun. I guess there's still a little boy in a lot of us that gets a kick out of playing war -- as long as he knows nobody is going to get hurt

And another result of the whole thing, as I mentioned earlier, was that I gained a good deal of respect for the people that are involved in the regiment

We had all the odds stacked in our favor. The officers were on our side since they wanted the men to get a good taste of what it was like to be under attack We knew the password, where the men were dug in and we couldn't be "killed" or taken prisoner even though they could.

On the whole, I'd say that, especially since most of them are part-time soldiers, the Ontario Regiment has some pretty professional people looking after our interests

Firefighters make $12,800 minimum in 1974

Oshawa firefighters voted 60 per cent in favor of ratifying a contract July 31 which will give them a 16.5 per cent increase in wages over a two year period.

Gary Hooper secretary negotiating committee chairman of Local 365 of the International Association of Firefighters says the two-year contract is retroactive to January 1 1973

He says a first class firefighter in 1972 was earning $11,000 a year That figure will rise by 6.5 per cent this year to $11,700 On January 1 1974 it will increase by six per cent to $12,402 and on July 1 1974 it will increase by four per cent to $12 810

The contract was successfully negotiated after 13 meetings with the city beginning December 28 1972. The firefighters negotiated 23 issues. Included in the issues were 12 paid statutory holidays per year, one more than the 11 first year and $15 expenses each time a firefighter attends a course in 1973 at the Gravenhurst Fire College This will increase to $20 in 1974

The 152 Oshawa firefighters affected by the contract will also receive $25 a year uniform cleaning expenses

MEMO FROM HELEN GAGEN

PEACHES A SPECIAL HOME-GROWN TREAT

There's good news for peach lovers this year. According to the latest crop report, local peaches are in good supply, good sized and of fine quality. In spite of unexpected weather problems there's lots of good canning stuff in that fresh peachy and those you do down for the winter.

By mid August the fruit of the luscious item I personal Red Haven and Red Globe should be at their peak. Enjoy them fresh, canned, jammed, frozen and in conserves.

For immediate use keep most of fruit uncovered peaches uncover at room temperature and out of the sun. The new packages in which you find them this year help storage. They are ready to eat when the fruit is behind the blush and at the stem is a creamy yellow color and they should be refrigerated for use within three to five days.

For thrifty peach treats throughout the winter home canning or freezing is a good idea. For canning choose almost any freestone cultivar Envoy Valiant Lola Veteran Berta or Red Skin. Red Havens are particularly flavorful for freezing. If using an unfamiliar variety treat a small lot and then the next day for suspicion. Not all varieties freeze equally well. For more information and peach recipe ideas write to me at the Review address.

Working parents of youngsters in the 6 to 9 group face problems in the fall

By Jane Milne
Staff Writer

Due to provincial legislation governing day care, children ages six to nine years whose parents work, will have no place to go for lunch or after school as of September 1

"We receive many requests for this service,' says Myrtle Stapley, administrator of Happy Tots Day Nursery in Oshawa "But due to the legislation children from six to nine must have separate facilities away from our full-time children aged two to five

The legislation ruling all day care centres and nurseries in the province require that the older children have 75 square feet of outdoor space per child and a maximum space inside of 30 square feet of floor space with 250 cubic feet of air space

"There can only be 30 children in this age group per playroom, they cannot go beyond the third floor and there must be one staff member for every 15 children," says Mrs Stapley

Such facilities would be of great expense to Happy Tots as well as to other nurseries in the Oshawa area who would also have to expand and possibly even relocate to accommodate the older age group of children whose part-time fees would not cover such costs

This summer Happy Tots received permission from Queen's Park to give care to 13 children in the six to nine age group until September bringing the nursery now to full capacity

"In our summer program for these children we have had to take them across the street to a park so they are separated from the younger children complying with the regulations," says Mrs Stapley

The only alternative left to parents of these children in September will be to hire a babysitter

Part of the great demand for the care of children by nurseries such as Happy Tots is the fact that the working parent can rely on the nursery not to close or go on vacation as an individual babysitter might

"There are not many individuals who will tie up all their time, especially during the summer and holidays says Mrs Stapley "The parents are not relying on one individual when they take their child to a nursery staffed with several persons because we are always here and pride ourselves on a small turnover of staff Changes can disturb a child who needs a settled situation"

Youngsters in the province between the ages of 6 and 9 may be left with nothing to do while their mothers work as a result of provincial legislation on day nurseries.

Legislation now exists to allow an individual to look after up to five children in a private home. Over five children however necessitates a licence to operate

"These private homes must meet health and fire standards just as day cares centres and nurseries and must be inspected by the Family and Social Services depatment," she says

Another reason why this type of day care isn't as readily available to parents as it once was is because of new income tax deductions which allow for day care expenses

Women who once were able to care for children in their own home without declaring the money earned as income, are now asked for their social security number so the parents can deduct day care expense on their income tax form

"These women have to volunteer their home and go into day care on a relatively permanent basis says Mrs. Stapley who agrees with the legislation in that it protects children and assures their safety and well being in these private homes

Some people only see the dollar sign when providing day care," she says. "A child may sit in front of a television all day and be given only peanut butter sandwiches and water for lunch Unless rules were set up there would be no way for a mother of a small child to known what her child endures all day

"I'm not saying that some individual babysitters aren't very good and provide the same programs we do but how do we check up on it?" she asks. "We have to meet requirements all way around If we don't come up to the standards set, we lose our licence"

The need for day care of children from infants right up to age 14 is seen by her as a present and growing demand on the part of working parents

"The economy of our country right now is such that it is demanding more and more parents to leave their children in order to work to provide a home and in some cases the necessities of life

Another age group which she is concerned about as well as the six to nine year group is the 10 to 14-year-old children

"If a mother is forced to work, there is nothing to accommodate these children," she says. "They are often left to wander on their own and I do feel juvenile delinquency is sometimes the result

"Personally I don't think children should be left on their own until they are at least 14," says Mrs Stapley The nursery school can't go beyond the age of nine but ideally park complexes could take care of the 10 to 14 age group with recreation supervision

She suggests that interested mothers living near the schools and park areas could perhaps serve lunches to these children and help provide proper supervision during lunchtime and after school

This could be a community affair to solve a lot of problems and contribute to society," she says "The parks are close to the schools, the buildings are there and the heat is there

However, the age groups of six to nine still requires more supervision which she says day nurseries would like to provide but because of costs with only part-time fees to meet them, it is presently financially impossible

We appreciate legislation because it keeps people in this business from abusing the necessary safeguards but the needs still loom very large the nurseries' and centres' hands are tied she says I don't know what the parents of children over six are going to do in September"

Doc's Queen's Park Diagnosis

By Dr Chris Kitchen
MPP Oshawa

In its first report to the Legislature the Select Committee on the Utilization of Educational Facilities was concerned with the question of how to gain increase use of school facilities by the community

The first and quite fundamental recommendation we made was that educational facilities in general and schools in particular must be regarded as resources of the whole community and that they should be available seven days a week 52 weeks a year

To make this practical we recommended that the government in its education grants recognize and allow for this usage

We found that many people feel frustrated by all the red tape they have to go through in order to use their schools People are confused by all the school boards councils and committees which now control the use of educational facilities

To remedy this we suggested that public use of schools must be made a right and not just a privilege It is the residents of a community who should decide on the use of schools

To accomplish more complete community use we recommended a system of community coordination be adopted This system would involve the setting up of local action councils

The councils would coordinate community resources including non school and manpower resources to serve local needs Our main thrust in this recommendation was to stimulate community involvement and local initiative

A central theme in our report is the need to break down the isolation of schools from the communities they are supposed to serve We found that the formal education process has tended to ignore the potential resources of the community

However one of our recommendations dealing with this is constantly being misinterpreted That is the suggestion that rigid teacher qualifications be abolished

What is often missed is that we recommended this "for others needed within the formal education system We have not suggested total abolition of qualifications for teachers but rather that qualification requirements be made more flexible and realistic

The committee would like to break down another barrier We support the serving of alcoholic drinks in schools when used for appropriate community functions

There are 25 recommendations in our report dealing with a range of objects from child care through recreation and leisure to school planning and design

The committee is very interested in having public reaction to this report and its recommendations Copies of the report are still available free of charge Contact me at 115 N W Queen s Park or 152 Simcoe Street North Oshawa

Wobbly Wally and his unicycle

Attempting a feat just because it has never been done before conjures up visions of people in barrels going over Niagara Falls sitting on flag poles or sailing a raft across the ocean

One such adventurer came through Oshawa last week on his way to completing his particular challenge

Walter J. Watts, better known as Wobbly Wally is attempting to make his first crossing of Canada on a unicycle

"I left Vancouver on May 26 after dipping my bike in the Pacific and am going to ride off the end of the pier in Halifax, says the 24-year-old native of Alberta, unless I get a sponsor in which case I will ride around the world"

He built the unicycle himself at a cost of $100 for materials got a leave of absence from his job as car inspector with CNR and started his journey, about which he plans to write a book that has taken him over mountains, through rain, snow, sleet and hail and through isolated areas complete with black bears

When asked the inevitable question why he dispells any suspicions of alientation or disenchantment with his life, by simply answering that it was an original idea,

"It s never been done before and it's a world record " he says

During his trip on the 42-inch diameter rubber wheel cycle, he says people have been friendly, often inviting him to their homes for meals or to stay overnight

People have been really good to me and the motorists courteous, he says 'Canada is a beautiful country '

Wally Watts is peddling his unicycle across Canada

Ontario cabinet gives Parkwood garage green light

By Garnet Cowsill
Staff Writer

The Ontario cabinet Friday upheld an Ontario Municipal Board decision which grants the Oshawa General Hospital proper zoning to construct the Parkwood parking garage

The garage was opposed at all hearing levels by the Oshawa Council of Ratepayers Associations (OCRA) and the Parkwood Neighbourhood ratepayers When the OMB announced its initial approval of the rezoning the two groups appealed to the cabinet for a re-hearing Only the cabinet has the authority to over-rule an OMB decision or to call for a rehearing

The re-hearing OCRA president Ed DKolodzie says was not granted because of a legal technicality that the groups did not petition the cabinet within the required 28 days

The cabinet decision followed a meeting two weeks ago between provincial officials representatives of the Hospital Board and Oshawa city solicitor S K Jain who requested dismissal of the request for a re-hearing

Meanwhile construction of the garage has gone ahead as scheduled despite the fact that the hospital was never issued with a city building permit

Because of that fact OCRA s Toronto lawyer B S Onyschuk, claimed that any construction by the hospital was in contravention of the city building and zoning bylaws In other words it was illegal

The statement was backed up by one city official who says there can be no foundation excavation begun at any construction site without the city first issuing a building permit

Mayor Jim Potticary says a building permit would be issued to the hospital as soon as possible

Asked if he thought the hospital had been constructing the garage illegally without a building permit Potticary answered

I don t know I've driven past there a few times but couldn t see any construction because of the high fence

According to another city official the construction could have been halted by the city while it was waiting for the cabinet decision by merely issuing a work stoppage order

According to OCRA's lawyer that s exactly what should have happened He wrote to the hospital board of governors asking them to voluntarily cease construction while the decision was being made

Asked why the city did not intervene Potticary says Really, it did not directly involve the city It was a matter between the hospital and the ratepayers The city was sort of in between"

HELP WANTED | HELP WANTED | HELP WANTED

There's More To Real Estate Than Just A License To Sell

It's not really tough to get a license to sell Real Estate.

Show that you're competent, remember enough to pass the government course examinations, put in the required effort and learning time and you can get a paper that officially calls you a real estate sales representative. But that's all it does, it doesn't guarantee you'll be a success that's entirely up to you.

At Young & Biggin we've taken steps to do more than just help you get a license. We're the first company in our field to install a closed circuit television system as part of our latest training program and we've secured exclusive Metropolitan Toronto rights to the best in-depth, video reality sales course ever produced. $250,000 went into the development of the R S I training system. Twenty hours of taped programs by the world's top experts are integrated with the live lectures and seminars.

If you join our instruction program, you can study while earning a living in real estate. Y&B offers day time courses or special night classes and it's absolutely free.

If you are thinking of a career in the real estate business, with top commissions, you owe it to your future to speak with Jim Jameson about the unique Y & B training system.

You can call him at 942-4751. YOUNG AND BIGGIN LTD., REALTOR

Dope dealer nets $35,000 while drug abuse soars

EDITOR'S NOTE: Oshawa Police Chief Jon Jenkins has expressed concern that drug arrests in the city have risen by 200 per cent in the last year. Police officials in other centres in the region also report increases in drug-related crimes. Where are all these drugs coming from? To get the answer, This Week assigned freelance writer Brian Evans the task of trying to contact a "dealer" in the area. Not the pusher who actually makes the sales to the drug user, but the man above him. The one who supplies all the pushers in the area. Brian was successful, although the interview resembled the plot from a Grade B gangster movie – including blindfolds and shotguns. Some of the more skeptical types will conclude that the ensuing article is the figment of the writer's imagination, but when one stops to realize just how much the dealer has to lose should his identity be revealed, it's easy to believe that such precautions would be taken.

By Brian Evans

At only 31 years of age, Alex plans to retire in four years and "live off the fat of the land."

His "import-distribution" business of 11 years is booming with ever-mounting numbers of steady customers enabling the Grade 9 drop-out to pull in between $25,000 and $35,000 a year.

How has this young man become so successful in his business? It's all supply and demand – he's a "dealer", supplying the most sought after commodity in demand in North America today – drugs.

It took much negotiation and planning to arrange for the interview with "Alex".

I picked up my contact at the bandshell in Oshawa, then, on his instructions, we drove to the Genosha Hotel. I was introduced to Alex there and we sat down for a beer. Small talk ensued and I was cautioned against talking about drugs while in public.

The three of us left the hotel at 8.45 p.m. and went to my car. Alex got behind the wheel and ordered me to lie down on the back seat. A towel was put over my face as a blindfold. We moved out into the traffic and total silence followed as we drove around the city for a good 20 minutes to throw off any potential followers.

editorial

Haste in adopting official plans is understandable

The three largest municipalities in the Durham Region are scurrying like mad to get new official plans prepared and approved by the province before the region officially starts up January 1

Whitby is most advanced. Council approval of the plan is just being held up for another couple of weeks to allow a little bit more public input

Oshawa planning board introduced its proposed official plan to the public just last week and is trying to squeeze in time for a little public comment before the end of August

Pickering Township is slower The Pickering planning board hopes to have a conceptual, broad-brush type of official plan ready for mid-September and a public hearing September 17

All three municipalities are currently operating with badly-outdated official plans and want to get provincial approval on the new ones before entering the unknown territory of regional government

Their objective is sound, although one can criticize the haste with which the process has been undertaken and the lack of public input into the Oshawa and Pickering plans.

Under normal conditions, an official plan takes about two years to prepare and to absorb comments and criticism from the public. But circumstances aren't normal and as a result the councils can be, to some extent, excused for their rush and shortcuts.

For the Durham Region will be without an official plan for three years. At least, the legislation setting up the region has given the regional council three years to finalize a regional official plan

And for the first year or at least until a regional development guide is prepared, the region will have no frame of reference except for recommendations of the Oshawa Area Planning and Development Study that were never approved and the official plans covering the member municipalities

While the rapid preparation of a regional development guide is an essential first action for the region, the major municipalities are acting in the best interests of the region now by accelerating preparation of their new official plans and using as much regional input as possible

Legalize pot

No matter where you look in the Durham Region, drug arrests and the number of drug-related crimes are sharply on the increase

Police and health officials are hard-pressed to come up with an explanation for this. Some attribute it to a lemming-like attitude amongst younger people -- they're racing madly toward destruction but don't seem to care

Others say that the previous scare tactics used to attempt to dissuade youngsters from using marijuana have turned these people off and they don't believe that the so-called hard drugs are any more harmful than cannibis.

Whatever the reason, we have ourselves a problem, and one that seems almost impossible to solve

One partial solution, and it is by no means a novel one, is to legalize marijuana and hashish, the so-called "soft" drugs. Most studies, as sketchy as they have been, indicate that these substances are not addictive and are actually less harmful to the human body than alcohol and cigarettes

Legalization would have two effects. It would control the quality of marijuana consumed and it would discourage the dealer -- the 1970s answer to Prohibition's bootlegger

Elsewhere in this issue, we have printed an interview with such a person who claims that he makes $35,000 a year out of dealing with drugs. He further admits that the "pushers" he sells the stuff to lace it with other materials, some of them harmful and even deadly to the human body

Drugs, despite what the ostriches say, are here to stay, so it's about time we faced the fact and took positive steps to control their use.

The carpet baggers

There's no better way to get on the good side of people you're expropriating than to preserve buildings with historical significance in that area.

At least that's what the federal and provincial governments seem to believe.

The two governments have set up what they call "a panel of experts" to evaluate what buildings of historical significance should be retained in the North Pickering Community project site in Pickering Township.

Now it seems logical that those who would know best what buildings are of historical interest are those people in that particular area, but then governments are never logical.

Of the six "experts" on the panel, only one is a resident, or rather former resident of the township. That person, a Dorothy Duncan now living in Willowdale, apparently grew up and went to school in Brougham and Greenwood.

Whether that makes her an "expert" on historical buildings is debatable. The other five members of the panel range from architect and Hamilton resident Anthony Butler, to Douglas Richardson, a professor at the University of Toronto.

With the exception of Anthony Adamson, a former professor at the same university and resident of Mississauga, all panel members are from Toronto. It looks very much like the senior governments don't trust the expertise of the locals.

Let's see a little re-evaluation gentlemen. Don't you agree local representation would go a long way to making this project more credible? In case you've forgotten, it's called "public participation."

What happens to all those high school youngsters who come pouring out of our educational institutions these days hardly able to spell their names? Why, they're given jobs where spelling is of prime importance. For instance, a staff writer called Ottawa information last week to get the telephone number of the Graphic Arts Inudustry Association and was told that it wasn't listed. The operator became rather huffy when the caller insisted that it had to be listed: "I'm sorry, sir," she said icily "but there's nothing listed under G-R-A-F-F-."

One This Week staffer recently had a large transport truck swing into the lane in front of him too quickly, swerve onto the gravel shoulder and send a large stone flying at the staffer's windshield, cracking it. The staffer got the licence numer, the number on the side of the truck and a description of the vehicle and driver, expecting his insurance agent to go after the transport company to pay for the replacement. It was all to no avail, however. The agent informed him that the time and expense of suing the company wasn't worth it and it would be better for him to pay the $25 deductible and have his insurance cover the rest

The old theatre tradition that the show must go on was carried on by a member of the cast of the Whitby Theatre Company last month. Blair Haviland, WTC president, was appearing opposite his wife in The Four Poster, at the Herongate Theatre in Locust Hill, but what the audience didn't know was that he had to have shots to freeze his knee to avoid the pain of an old cartilage injury that had flared up. Once the production was over, he was admitted to hospital for surgery.

Mickey Mouse approach to government has to go

by linda sutton

Municipal politics in the Durham region has been the purview of the amateur - the part-time politician who doesn't really consider himself - or herself - a politician.

The men and women who serve in municipal office now do so for a variety of reasons - out of a genuine desire to serve their community, for public recognition, because they hope to improve their businesses or jobs. A few use municipal office as a stepping stone to the legislature or the House of Commons

But none thinks of himself as a pro. None has any special training to prepare him to govern a municipality although a few have had experience on various boards and commissions.

Regional government hopefully will bring some professional competence to the job of running a municipality

Of course there is no formal training to become an alderman no course of study for mayors. But the regional councillors will of necessity work full-time at their jobs

The public should expect them to be knowledgeable and astute at their second chosen profession, bringing with them the experience and wisdom they have accumulated.

A municipal politician in the future more so than in the past will have to be a specially-equipped person, well-versed in the intricacies of municipal government and all of its divers duties and responsibilities

Municipal governments now disperse about half of the monies all governments collect. They have tremendous influence on the life of each community. This responsibility will be magnified by regionalization

The people who enter political life at the municipal level will in the future have to do so with well-defined philosophies as well as with good intentions. It's not an easy job and there is much to learn for any novice

However, municipal politicians should be equipped with the same kind of resource staff that assist federal and provincial members.

At present, municipal politicians have to rely on the good graces of their own private secretaries or someone from the clerk's office to do their typing. They have to do their own research or not do it at all. This system has got to go with the introduction of the Durham Region

The public expects its politicians to govern well and shouts loudly when they appear not to be governing well. Citizens seem to resent paying good wages to municipal politicians and even more to providing them with a resource and research staff. Yet these are essential tools for an effective politician

What with meetings and constituency work, the regional politician will not likely have time to conduct personal investigations of situations, size up public feeling on an issue, evaluate staff recommendations

He will require people to do the spadework, to provide him with briefs outlining situations, to provide a fresh and detached viewpoint: thus leaving him with time to think, evaluate, make decisions in the best interests of the region instead of on a spur-of-the-moment basis

A small research team or perhaps four or five people would be of incalcuable benefit to the government of the region

In addition, the regional council must take a different view of the administration itself

In all too many of the municipalities going into the region, the various municipal department are really little fiefs under department heads. Because of the divisiveness of the system, the department heads - either by choice or by force of circumstance - have created little kingdoms of which they are very protective. This kind of system too has got to go

Planning for the development of the region to best service all of its people will require teamwork on a lasting basis. I don't mean just the occasional staff meeting, but real interdisciplinary teamwork where the social services director and the treasurer and the engineer and the planner all understand a set of objectives laid down by the council and how their operations relate to one another

After all, the prime purpose of a regional or municipal government is to make life better for its citizens. A wide spectrum of services is provided but they are all for people - from roads to welfare

Oshawa treasurer Frank Markson had a good idea when he suggested rotating staff from one department to another. The suggestion may appear radical - especially if you shift an engineer to the social services department - but this kind of innovative approach must be considered

Nothing sacred when it comes to making a buck

A friend of mine, who looks at free enterprise the way Richard Nixon must be looking at John Dean these days, made a particularly damning statement in a recent conversation.

Someone had made the comment that they had read somewhere that if all the people of China stood up on platforms and all jumped off at the same time, the resulting earthquake would cause a tidal wave that would completely flood the North American continent

"Yeah, and if they announced a plan to do so, there would be thousands of North American businessmen clamoring to build the platforms," replied my friend. "They'd shrug off any criticism by saying business is business."

At the time, I brushed aside his statement as an attempt at humor by a man who looks at the world through pink-tinted glasses But now I'm not too sure

It seems that no matter what it might be, there's somebody around to try to make a quick buck out of it

Take, for instance, a news item in one of the Toronto papers awhile back about an enterprise being built in Mobile, Alabama

"They're digging a 15-acre Sea of Galilee, gathering animals for Noah's Ark and putting up a scaffold for the Tower of Babel

"read the first paragraph.

And guess what they're calling this take-off on Disneyland. Right on, brother: welcome to Holyland

Visitors will be able to visit the Wailing Wall, ride a camel or elephant to the pyramids and cheer as Christians are thrown to the lions in the 12,000-seat Coliseum.

Or if it isn't sadism but masochism you're after, you can even be swallowed by Jonah's whale

by tom douglas

But the most disturbing part of the whole thing is that as a come-on, the promoters are building a 10-foot illuminated statue of Jesus on a pillar 13 storeys high and visible for five miles

Should the venture be successful -- and there are enough kooks around who will visit it and come back with bumper stickers boasting of the fact -- the mind boggles at what they'll think of next

It wouldn't be too surprising to learn that somebody in Milwaukee is building a Naziland complete with gas chambers, ovens and lampshade factories. Can you just imagine the advertisements

"Spend a fun weekend with Ilsa Koch and Adolph Eichmann at the reconstructed Dachau concentration camp. See what it was really like during the horrible days of the 1930s and 40s. Eat pumpkin soup three times a day, work 14-hour shifts on the gravedigging detail and thrill to the sound of machinegun fire as some of your fellow guests try to escape."

Or perhaps somebody will decide to build Gloryland where you're met at the gate by St. Peter, given a white robe and a harp and for 25 cents you can climb Jacob's ladder. At night, couples will sip ambrosia and dance to the music of Gabriel and His Cherubs

Another sure thing would be Infernoland where pretty young women with long red leather boots and red whips punish the wicked, the obese are subjected to long sessions in Satan's steam room and those visitors who are really steeped in self-revulsion are subjected to repeated readings of stupid columns such as this.

No shots required for trip

Sir:

I'm going on a charter flight to Poland this Friday to stay for a month and I want to know if I require any shots.

I'll be flying direct from Toronto to Warsaw where I am to meet my brother whom I have not seen in 42 years. He lives in the Ukraine but I can't go there so we are meeting in Warsaw where we have a mutual friend.

Polly Huminuk
Darlington

Mrs. Humeniuk will be pleased to know that she can take her long-awaited trip to Poland without the inconvenience of submitting to a series of painful injections and innoculations. The Polish Canadian Information Bureau and Travel Advice Centre in Toronto has informed This Week that shots are not required to enter Poland, and that Canada has dropped an earlier regulation requiring someone returning to this country to have certain innoculations. So Mrs. Humeniuk can fly free and easy without a sore arm.

Sir:

During the Oshawa Home Show at the end of April my wife and I bought a counter-top dishwasher for $52.45 from a Mr Pactor who was running a display of these dishwashers. The dishwasher was not satisfactory and we took Mr. Pactor at his word that we could return it if it didn't work.

Around the first of May I called Pactor at Hi-Polymart Ltd. 75 Brisbane Road in Downsview, and told them to send someone down to pick it up. No one came, although I called several more times and wrote a couple of letters.

Finally I took the unit back myself and they gave me a receipt on a piece of scrap cardboard, saying I'd get a cheque in the mail the next day. That was around the end of May

I've continued to write and to call. Recently I went there in person and waited two hours and got more assurances the cheque would be in the mail the next day. It didn't come within a couple of days, and a further phone call got me the same answer

I still haven't got my money. I'm not worried about the money any more. I've bought my wife a real good dishwasher, now. But it's the principle of the thing. Could you try to help me get satisfaction from this company?

Sam Galea,
Oshawa

Mr. Galea's problem is a difficult one, considering the inaccessibility of Mr. Pactor and his lack of cooperation. This Week obtained a commitment from Mr. Pactor two weeks ago that a cheque in the amount of $52.45 would be forthcoming to Mr. Galea immediately. As yet he has received no cheque and Pactor continues to be "out" to phone calls.

In view of Pactor's reluctance to cooperate, This Week contacted the Metro Toronto Better Business Bureau to explain the situation and request an investigation. Mr. Galea has also followed our advice to complain to the Ontario Consumer Protection Agency in Toronto. We hope he has some success from that angle and This Week will continue to pursue Mr. Pactor in hope of satisfying Mr. Galea's justifiable complaint.

Rossland Park

'the ultimate in carefree living'

Where the action is might be a good slogan for Rossland Park's highrise apartments, pictured above. Whether you have a young family and are looking for a place where a nursery school and recreation centre are nearby or you are one of the singles crowd hoping to find rental accommodation where parties and social gatherings abound, Rossland Park's highrise apartments are for you. The Country Club gives you all the activities you could care to participate in and we offer an adults only as well as a family building. And for the top of the line in rental accommodation, ask to see one of our townhouses, shown at right. No matter what you have in mind, we have a rental unit that is sure to please you

One of the many compliments we hear about Rossland Park is the fact that, unlike many rental complexes, there is a wide variety of building styles to choose from. Rossland Park is a totally-planned community, designed to please every taste. The newest addition to this community within a community is the Garden Apartment, pictured above. Featuring an inner courtyard with cascading ponds, these units offer the finest in resort-style living this side of the Mediterranean.

When Rossland Park says there is rental accommodation to suit all tastes, that's exactly what is meant. For those people who want something a little more private than an apartment yet feel they don't wish to rent a townhouse, the perfect answer is an apartment home. These two-storey apartments features an attractive foyer, party rooms and laundromats and a design that lends itself to imaginative interior decorating. Combine this withall the advantages of The Country Club and you have an ideal living style that cannot be matched anywhere else in the area.

Dealer makes $35,000 yearly out of region

The car stopped I was told to remain still Another wait The towel was secured around my face and I was helped to my feet and led inside a building

After the towel was removed, Alex seemed to grow more friendly In the light of what seemed to be a farmhouse, I was able to study him: long hair tied back in a ponytail, sunglasses dark beard, medium height and build

'Let's see your wallet he asked. I produced it and was then searched thoroughly. He went through every article in my pockets

"Can't be too careful you understand?" he said

The door opened and our party grew to four people Only this one had a loaded 12-gauge shotgun on his hip My stomach rolled as I hoped they were only trying to impress me

The youth's arm cradling the gun looked like road maps from all the old needle holes

"No one followed " he said

During the course of the two-hour interview, Alex stated many facts concerning his business

"I feed Bowmanville, Oshawa, Whitby, Port Perry, Ajax, Pickering and Bay Ridges," he said "I deal in cocaine hash (cannabis resin), speed (methamphetamine), hash oil (liquid cannabis resin), small amounts of opium, acid (LSD) and MDA (Methylene Dioxy Amphetamine) And large amounts pounds of grass (marijuana) "

He does not deal in heroin but said it is available in the Durham Region

To back up his boasts, he took me into a room where he pulled a covering off a table The contents included varying amounts of raw speed, cocaine and bottles of MDA Alex claimed the drugs had a street value of Freelance writer Brian Evans checks the "stash" of cocaine of a drug dealer in the Durham region who says he makes as much as $35,000 a year out of trafficking. Evans is looking at a supply of cocaine which the dealer told him in an interview straight out of Capone's Chicago that he sells for $1,100 an ounce uncut.

$11 000

The "speeder" with the shotgun seemed to get very nervous So did I When I went to take pictures, the camera was taken from me and Alex took the shots He then wiped his fingerprints off and handed the camera back to me Very cautious indeed

With only two charges against him for possession of hashish and marijuana, never for trafficking, Alex said he has been able to continue his dealership because he only sell his merchandise in large quantities, is very careful and selective in the chemists he deals with and is paranoid

I am paranoid for my own protection,' he said 'I stay alone, live cheap drive an old car, wear old clothes and view every person as a potential narc (narcotics investigator)

His attitude varies from contempt to fear where police are concerned

Cops are dumb pigs said Alex "I was even going to shoot one once The Mounties worry me though They'll sit on you for years to get you

Perhaps another key to his success is that he 'knows' his product well admitting, "I've used them

Alex buys directly from the chemists who make the drugs in a laboratory (he wouldn't specify where) with the exception of cannabis which is imported He then sells in bulk to smaller dealers who in turn can stretch their profits by adding to the original product

He said there is a difference though in quality of drugs depending on where they are bought and who they are distributed by

'There is bad dope on the streets,' he said Speed is mixed with dextrose and Epsom sales; vitamins are being sold as uppers (amphetamines) and grass is laced with straw '

I won't do this," he said. "You can wind up awful dead The worst drug is alcohol Both my parents were alcoholics and I hated their guts '

When asked how he rationalized his part in the drug scene and effects drug use has on peoples' lives, he said society is already screwed up

Shaft the world, it's shafting you," is his philosophy. "You should see some of the people I deal with," he said, "I've sold to lawyers, teachers and even politicians."

He divides his customers into two groups, the "pseudo hippies" contemptuously called "weekend rompers" who buy mostly grass and hash and "the good people", the full-time drug users

They're two different worlds," he said.

As well as his concern for the Mounties and suspicion of everybody, Alex said the tax legislation is tough to cope with

'I have to work on construction for at least three months out of the year for tax purposes," he said Most of my money is in stocks and bonds and I even bought shares in the City of Oshawa. What safer place?"

"We have work to do now," he said, referring to the testing and packaging of the drugs for sale. "You better leave '

Perhaps the most interesting thing he said during the evening was just before I was blindfolded again to be led out.

He said with a slight smile. "Hey Evans, who really cares?"

Funny thing, I couldn't think of a decent answer

Drug arrests increase sharply in Durham region

Drug arrests are up 200 per cent over this time last year says Chief Jon Jenkins of the Oshawa Police Department

The RCMP between September, 1972 and August 1973 made 69 arrests for possession, 30 for trafficking and one for importing

'Methamphetamine (speed) is being treated as a major drug problem in the Oshawa area," says an RCMP spokesman

The use of speed (as demonstrated here by a model) and other drugs has increased dramatically over the past year according to many experts in the area.

and is a prime target of a drug enforcement team consisting of members of the Oshawa Police Department the Ontario Provincial Police and the RCMP

The Whitby Police report approximately 24 arrests in the last year involving illegal drugs

Detective Wozniak of the Whitby force says it would be impossible to give an accurate number of drug related arrests since many crimes are committed while under the influence of a drug or for money to buy drugs

A balanced number of arrests for possession and for trafficking was attained from January of this year to July by the Pickering Township Police with 27 for trafficking and 27 for possession

Another area in which drug use can be determined is the hospital

"We have treated 35 cases of drug abuse in the period between July 1972 and July 1973," says Pat Guernsey of the Oshawa General Hospital She qualifies this number by saying: "We only get the really bad ones. Others will go to drug crisis centres to be with their own kind."

Of 1,408 admissions to the Whitby Psychiatric Hospital last year, Dr. John Deadman says, 83 represented problems of drug abuse and 351 were treated for abuse of alcohol

Thunderbirds will be soaring in Whitby

The Thunderbirds that are racing in Whitby don't have four wheels and curleques on their sides

These Thunderbirds are sailing craft and 23 of them from Canada and the United States will be competing in the sixth Thunderbird World championships at the Whitby Yacht Club

Crews are trailing their boats to Whitby all the way from Seattle and Victoria. Other entrants will come from the eastern seaboard of the United States to the weeklong event that starts with a cocktail party Saturday night at the Whitby Yacht Club

Actual racing will begin Monday on Lake Ontario one mile off shore. There will be two races Monday, Tuesday and Thursday. The final race is to be held the morning of Friday, August 10.

The Whitby Yacht Club, designated Thunderbird Fleet 26, will enter five boats in the contest Fleet 10, based at the Toronto Yacht Club, will also have a number of competitors and is assisting the Whitby Club in organizing the event and supplying judges

A Thunderbird is a 26-foot-long sloop originally designed for family cruising All are built to precisely the same standards of dimensions, weight, equipment and sails, explains Les Higham, publicity chairman for Thunderbird Fleet 26 Each has a crew of four, including the skipper

"As a result," says Higham, "the emphasis in Thunderbird racing is on the crew's sailing skills, although individual skippers will tune their boats to their own satisfaction

Now the Thunderbird is an international racing craft as well as a family cruise boat

"It's like anything else," says Higham 'When a few people get together with the same kind of boat they end up racing against each other just for the hell of it

The Whitby Yacht Club is exceptionally pleased to host this international regatta since the club was only started in 1967 he

A number of the competitors from out-of-town will be billeted at the Ontario Ladies' College The College is also the site of the awards banquet to be held after the final race

Next Wednesday all of the crews and their families will join in the fun of a Segellest at the yacht club There will be German food a barbeque lots of beer and a German Band

A social committee chaired by Joan Jones, is arranging to put on a breakfast at the club each morning during the competitions and to pack box lunches for the competitors

The Thunderbirds will race around a five-mile three-legged course

Since they are so well matched the race promises to be exciting as each four-men crew tries for the edge over his opponents, says Higham

Spectators will be able to see the races from the shore although they may not be able to identify the individual boats

The current world champion, John Malleson of Victoria, will be in Whitby to defend his title

Fanfare cost still in a muddle

You've heard of the game button, button, who's got the button?

Well, city council is playing the same game with a different twist It's called medallions, medallions who's got the medallions

It all started when the Fanfare committee and the Central Council of Neighborhood Associations decided to sell fanfare medallions as a souvenir from the pre-Summer Games celebrations

The original offer was that the various neighborhood park associations would buy so many medallions from the city at 2. cents each sell them for 50 cents and keep the profit They would be responsible for those medallions they did not sell

Somehow because of a lack of communications that idea got turned around and the parks thought that they didn't have to buy anything from the city All they had to do was get the medallions sell them, turn in 25 cents to the city along with the medallions they didn't sell and keep the profit

According to an August 1 internal auditor's report to council, more than 8,900 medallions, and the revenue, have not been turned in to the city.

'From this total outstanding, a conservative estimate of revenue might be $600-$700", the report says

City council is in a quandary It still hasn't decided what to do about the matter

A MAJOR BREAKTHROUGH
In 1971, Philips announced the Modular 4 color television chassis. The acclaims for this unique new design were expressed in terms like "breakthrough, dependable, and value", Experience has proved and supported these claims which can be attested to by thousands of satisfied Philips Modular 4 owners. The latest Modular 4 chassis is again the heart of the Philips 1973 line of color television.

MODULAR CONCEPT
Philips Modular 4 color chassis was designed on the building block principle avoiding complicated circuits with their inherent trouble-spots, breakdown possibilities and unreliability. The major portions of the circuit were localized to four panels.

Magnetic treatment

Dr. Brownlee trys to overcome opinion polarized against him

By John Bell
Staff Writer

Feeling under the weather? Take two magnets and get plenty of rest

Sounds crazy, but if Dr Harold Brownlee of Oshawa gets his way, the magnet may come into its own as the latest and most revolutionary form of medical treatment and diagnosis

Brownless, a practising chiropractor for over 30 years, has been beating his head against the traditional 'give us the facts wall of the medical profession to gain recognition for his work with magnets

His main stumbling block so far, he says, is not a lack of data, case histories or confidence in his discovery, but rather the fact that he's not a medical doctor, but a chiropractor

Not one to be discouraged by constant rejections of his work, Brownlee has contacted and worked with reputable scientists in other parts of the world to give more weight to his argument that magnets can be used as a valid form of diagnosis and treatment in medicine

He has spent hours researching the subject, accumulating a mass of data and is now more than ever convinced that he's right All he's asking for is the chance to sit down with any medical doctor who will listen and prove his case

In his approach to the use of magnets in medicine, appropriately named the 'Brownlee System of Magnetic Reflexes and their Significances', Brownlee claims that diseases and conditions found in most patients stem from malfunctions or imbalances in the basic organs such as the liver, kidneys or intestines, and in the glands

For example, Brownlee maintains that 85 out of 100 cases of patients having stiff necks are actually cases of bowel upsets Similarly, most cases of bursitis in the shoulder stem from trouble of the liver, or gall bladder, he says

He cites allergies as another example. In most cases these stem from upsets in the four basic organs the liver, the kidneys, the bowels and the intestines Actually, he says, most are really the result of liver problems

But where does the use of magnets enter into the picture?

Brownlee maintains that every cell in the body carries a magnetic field. Since organs are composed of cells they too have magnetic fields and these magnetic fields are in fact the key to diagnosing the treating malfunctions in the body

Through the use of monopolar magnets, those being magnets which do not have a north and south pole as is commonly the case but rather only one pole Brownlee can determine whether there is a magnetic imbalance in a particular organ

If the reading from the organ is negative, he says, then that organ is overfunctioning or overvitalized. A positive reading indicates that the organ is underworking or underfunctioning

As a double-check procedure, he also does a magnetic check of the particular section of the spinal column associated with the organ involved

If this check shows no extreme activity in the nerves, he says, then it is not that particular organ that is causing the problem and further investigation begins

Basically what his analysis using magnetic fields does, he says, is discover early imbalances in the cell tissues of the body before laboratory tests are conclusive

He can then attack the problem from the standpoint where by again utilizing magnetic fields he can sedate or stimulate the tissue to relieve the condition

His belief in his work is so intense that he says using his sytem, he can discover abnormalities in the tissue long before a medical analysis would expose the condition to recommend proper treatment

There are limitations in the system which he has yet to iron out, he says One limitation, he says, is the blood itself Since blood does not carry a magnetic field, it's impossible at the present time to identify an ailment until it is reflected in one of the organs He's optimistic that this problem will be solved

In some ways he says his work is similar in nature to the use of acupuncture by the Japanese and Chinese since both he and they use the positive and negative fields of the body as the basis for diagnosis and treatment

The only difference in his mind, he says, is that his process is far more logical

As far as he's concerned the clinical proof of his method is beyond any doubt, and he's quite willing to prove it to anyone in the medical profession

"My system", he says "can stand up 100 per cent to laboratory and X-ray tests I'd stake my reputation on it

Brownlee discovered the potential of using magnetic fields as a form of diagnosis and treatment quite by accident In his practice, he says, he had been dealing with positive and negative fields for years, only from the chemical standpoint

He says he realized that the weak point of this method was at the diagnostic end, and so launched himself on a course to find a solution to the problem

When he studied the effects of magnetic fields on the tissues and organs he knew he had found the solution. Then, he says, it was just a matter of time and effort, of going out and examining every known case of anything he could find to verify his findings

He says he didn't care what the case involved whether it be a broken hip or an upset stomach The important thing, he says, was to confirm what he had discovered

Now he's done that. All that's needed now is for someone to listen and investigate what he's found

Dr. Harold Brownlee of Oshawa uses magnets for the treatment of many ills. For years, there have been those who regard such a practice as quackery, but recent articles in national publications have given Dr. Brownlee cause for optimism that perhaps some day this sort of treatment will be recognized medically.

Council's refuse decision seen as rubbish

Sir:

One can build his own house, if one wishes it, a yacht or an aeroplane, and use them all as long as they conform to the prescribed standards, but in the city of Oshawa, one cannot build a garbage can—he has to buy it from the store

This information I received from the Sanitation Department when I complained that one (out of two) of my garbage containers was left not emptied, with the sticker on it "Unsuitable container

This particular container weighs 10 pounds (perhaps 25 pounds when it was full), has a 16-inch diameter, is 24 inches high, has two comfortable wooden handles, a lid with a handle and it is painted green

Apparently the reason for its "unsuitability" is its origin. It was made from an empty oil drum, and empty oil drums were taboo with the city council when it was making the bylaws on the suitability of garbage containers

In my opinion, the city council had an "off night making that bylaw, and the councillor who proposed it wasn't thinking straight

The bylaw, if needed, should tell to what specifications those containers have to conform, not some vague ideas that . let- men picking up garbage be the sole judges

One cannot blame them really, after all they are not paid for the amount they collect, and as far as they are concerned, two one-gallon containers (preferably disposable ones) for each household, would be just fine

And yet, why would they leave one container out of two, total weight perhaps 50 pounds, for technicality when the maximum pickup from each household is eight containers, up to 50 pounds each? Is that co-operation?

These days when people are becoming more and more concerned about depleting our natural resources and mounting garbage, about recycling our waste - what is wrong with making garbage containers out of discarded oil drums? Isn't is recycling?

It seems that there is a drive in certain quarters to eliminate the garbage cans altogether, using only the plastic bags in the name of progress

In fact there was a debate in the city council on that subject some time ago, and one councillor went as far as to propose giving "free" garbage bags (bought with whose money?) to pacify the opposition

Although easier to collect, garbage bags have serious drawbacks. For one thing, they are not biodegradable, for another, they add to the steadily mounting piles of garbage we produce

For a city the size of Oshawa, it would mean a few million garbage bags every year. And of course, more use of our depleting raw materials

What is the point of hysterical protests against land use for sanitary land-fill and strong demands for the costly garbage recycling one one hand, and making more garbage by using the garbage bags for convenience on another? It doesn't make sense

Twentieth century racism?

Sir:

Janet Wilson's piece of scare fiction in your August 1 edition, Zero Population Growth is the Answer, tells us a great deal about Ms. Wilson's attitude toward sex in general and child bearing in particular, but served no other purpose

Bigots used to try and tell us that black people were unwashed or Jewish people were greedy in order to find an alibi for their bigotry.

Nowadays they tell us children are bad for the environment and people who have them are immoral. It is 20th century racism.

Governments still pay some farmers not to grow some produce. Farmers still plow crops under at times because there is no market

Our universe has no problem feeding, housing and clothing a growing population. The problem is that our inadequate distribution system allows some to go hungry while others wonder what to do with the leftovers that make up most of our garbage

Ms Wilson will solve nothing by attacking the victims

What we need is mors people with the courage to attack the problem

Dislikes adoption remark

Sir:

I have just read an article in your paper regarding Zero Population and birth control.

I must agree that everyone is entitled to their own opinion on these matters, however, you stated "By taking such precautionary measures we will cut down on the number of children that are born only to be put up for adoption.".

Is there something wrong with adoption?

My husband and I were informed that we could not have any children and therefore applied to adopt We went through five months of interviews supplying references, obtaining complete medicals etc

We have to date been waiting one year for our baby, and still no word! We have our own home, a nursery prepared and lots of extra time and love for this very much wanted child.

This is not an isolated case There are numerous couples like us waiting to form a family

In future I hope you will take note and see that there are two sides to every story

Just the Two of Us!

EDITOR'S NOTE: The article in question was written by a member of a youth group whose summer project is to put out a page a week in our paper. They pay for the space and their views- especially in this case - do not necessarily reflect those of This Week. We wish the reader every success in her efforts to adopt a child.

Band plays on

Sir:

Our next concert will be on Sunday, August 19 at 2.30 p.m. on the patio at Hillsdale Manor

The public is invited to attend along with the citizens of Hillsdale. The program will consist of popular classical to modern selections

We did enjoy the photo of the band that appeared recently in your paper showing a concert in progress at the Bandshell. Thank you

Magnificent eight jeered

Sir

Tuesday night, Oshawa "apparently" lost another great sporting event

The National Aerobatics Championships sponsored by Aeronautics Canada were turned down by city council It seems that eight members of council are the only people who think the show will be bad for Oshawa

Alderman John DeHart is bothered by the noise of an airplane, breaking the silence of his quiet Saturday or Sunday But just hang on a minute here John, how about the lawn mowers buzzing around your neighborhood?

I suppose you have been awakened by an airplane flying over your house instead of a neighbor's mower or the kids yelling and screaming outside your window

And sir it certainly is quiet on a Saturday afternoon in our downtown district isn't it

Readers write

Why Mr. DeHart and Alderman John Aker are against the noise factor is beyond reason, when people who live along Taunton Road signed a petition, along with 400 other citizens in favor of the show

Alderman Jack Wiley attempted to have the matter referred to board of control or another committee, but it seems it had to be one of the "Magnificent eight" who voted against the show that would have to refer us to another committee

I can still not understand what the harm would be in having the air show delegation take the matter to board of control for re-consideration

Shades of Watergate enter the picture, sports fans! For not one of the gentlemen against the show wants to be the "John Dean" of Oshawa council and go against Our Worship (who said thumbs down on the show also)

For the past month I have helped Murray Garrison who made what many people thought was a fine presentation before council Tuesday night We have spent many hours of our time talking to different citizens about the show and explaining the facts to them

I know Murray does not feel like giving up on the issue, nor do I; we still both realize this can be a great boost for Oshawa, and can do no harm to the city or its residents

To the six council members who voted for the show and were 100 per cent behind us, and to the approximately 500 people who signed the petition we say "thank you"

For the sports-minded people in Oshawa, it's a disappointment. Just imagine the Ontario Summer Games and a major Canadian championship show, both in one year in our city

We'll still fight city hall for the show. But you know in a way I don't think Oshawa really deserves it now, especially after the manner in which the issue has been turned down

In closing, I would ask you to please be quiet going by Alderman DeHart's home on a Saturday or Sunday "Let us not disturb the slumber of our concerned" Alderman

The fight will go on to get the show for Oshawa, and it will most likely be turned down again But don't be surprised if Aeronautics Canada goes ahead with the show anyway And if turns out to be a success Look for Mayor Jim and the boys to accept applause for being so cordial and putting on such a great show in a great city

Provincial garbage stand

Sir:

The province of Ontario will let stand the agreement for garbage disposal regarding revenue, between Metro Toronto and Pickering Township

With the recent establishment of the Regional Municipality of Durham which includes Pickering Township, it was believed that the region would receive the revenue from the township garbage dump sites

The township will receive the six cents per ton payable by Metropolitan Toronto for using Pickering Township dump sites. This decision was reached during a discussion with Ontario Treasurer, the Honourable John White

The location of the Pickering dump sites has still to be approved by the Environmental Hearing Board of the province and the Ontario Municipal Board

Under the agreement, Pickering Township residents will continue to be able to dispose of garbage at a Scarborough dump and land fill site

Plans call for three Pickering Township Garbage sites which will be used as Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority recreational areas

Hurray for Kassinger?

Sir:

In my opinion, the N.D.P.'ers, and the left wing reactionaries are a part of our problem here in Canada

They do have a way with words. They hate words like "profit", land owners, private enterprise, decentralization, and individualism

These people worship power The power hungry men of history have pursued the policy of centralizing and consolidating into their hand the power to control the lives of nations

People with eyes can see the progressive increase of bureaucratic power of all levels of government

Mr Kassinger seems to see it

Retarded care benefits from ministry shuffle

By Linda Sutton
Staff Writer

Retarded people have a place of their own in every community, says Dr D E Zarfas, director of the retardation services branch of the ministry of health

They shouldn't be hidden away in massive institutions, says Zarfas, explaining that the new thrust of the ministry is to shift the emphasis to total community care for the mentally retarded

"Care for the retarded used to be too medically oriented," he says "As a result the retarded were made to appear sick; whereas, they are actually in need of training

The government is moving slowly in the development of in-community services for the retarded, says Zarfas, stressing that community acceptance and preparation is essential to successful implementation of the goal

"It's not our intent to have a mass exodus from the institution to the community"

Much study goes into the discharge of each individual from an institution, he says, and his branch works very closely with the Ontario Mental Retardation Association and its local branches in planning discharges

Each community can tolerate and deal with its own retarded population just as it can tolerate and deal with the broad spectrum of people needs, says Zarfas

The director of the retardation services branch stresses that the maximum possible opportunities and alternatives should be available for the care and development of the mentally retarded

Support services

Early diagnosis of retardation is essential, he says, and along with this should be offered support services - assessment, family counselling, day care centres, appropriate educational opportunities, and job opportunities for the adult retarded

Retarded children are more difficult to manage and train than normal children and parents need special assistance from professionals to learn the skills and methods, needed to train them, says Zarfas.

The mildly retarded can get along quite well on their own if they are given the supportive services they require, he says. If there is no co-ordinated community approach, people tend to drop out of the program

The ministry in the future will emphasize day care centres for the more seriously retarded between the ages of two and 18. "A mother can keep a retarded child at home if she gets some relief," says Zarfas "There is no reason why she should have to work that much harder to bring up a retarded child Being able to send her child to a day care centre allows her to be able to tolerate the situation

"In addition, retarded children need the socialization offered at a day care centre

"A retarded child," he says, "has to leave earlier to catch the boat."

Broaden education

In addition to direct support services to families with a retarded child, Zarfas urges the broadening of the educational system to satisfy the needs of almost all retarded children and says that perhaps even the day care program should be incorporated into the school system.

A retarded adult should have a wide range of alternatives available, he says, both in job opportunities and home situation

In addition to the many sheltered workshops in the province, retarded adults should have the opportunity to work in a sheltered employment situation and to seek free employment.

"A retarded person should also look forward to leaving the home," says Zarfas. "A lot of kids have come to institutions because the other programs have not been available. If we are able to provide a broad spectrum of services more of them could live at home longer."

Ruth and Hans Schirmer of Simcoe Street North in Oshawa chose This Week as the vehicle for showing relatives in East Germany what freedom of the press is all about in the western countries during a recent trip behind the Iron Curtain.

This Week faithfuls pass word behind iron curtain

Some This Week readers will go to almost any lengths to prove their loyalty to the paper

Ruth and Hans Schirmer, 517 Simcoe St. N. Oshawa went to Leipzig in the German Democratic Republic

Actually the Schirmers visit Germany and family in Leipzig about every three years. During their visit this July they took along copies of This Week, says Mr. Schirmer, to give friends and relatives behind the iron curtain a true picture of what life in Canada is all about

"I'm very interested in local affairs," he explained, "and This Week covers this whole area very well."

Publications in communist countries portray a very negative situation in North America and Canada, said Schirmer, who wanted to try and correct this impression. Papers in East Germany select the facts that suit the image they are trying to project of life in the Western world, he said, the drug problem, unemployment, rising prices and so on

"They are told we all live in debt and they are comforted in having a low standard of living by being told that what they have is theirs."

Schirmer also sends copies of This Week in letters to his family back in East Germany and hopes that his mail won't be opened

He came to Canada from the German Democratic Republic about 20 years ago. Schirmer is the only member of his family in Canada and he likes to maintain ties with his relatives

This time they spent the month of July in Germany, mainly in Leipzig and northern Germany. They took their boys, Hans, eight, and Michael, five

Leipzig, Schirmer said, is a showplace for the German Democratic Republic at least in the core of the centre where many beautiful public buildings stand

But the residential areas are very run down, the rents are too low to allow the apartment building owners to fix them up properly, and in any event there are not enough tradesmen to do the job

The city administration is made of communist party members who have little particular expertise, said Schirmer, although people are gradually being educated for such positions

While there are still some privately owned apartment buildings and houses, the civic administration establishes the rent scales. Rents vary from about $7 a month to $20.

People can buy small private cars in East Germany, but they must pay in advance and wait 7½ years for delivery, said Schirmer, who works in the purchasing department of General Motors. And even if they can afford to buy a car, he says, a quart of gas costs about the same as an hour's wages

Over the years, however, Schirmer has noticed the standard of living in East Germany slowly rising

But people there are still happy to have any apartment he said

This nurse with a mustache is well-accepted by patients

The trend toward pant-suit-style nursing uniforms is nothing new for one nurse at the Oshawa General Hospital.

Alan Nason, one of two male nurses at the OGH always wears pants.

Mustachioed Nason has been coordinator for special services for about a year. He started at the Oshawa General three years ago as head nurse for the recovery room, and replaced a woman as coordinator.

A man in nursing is rare although there are more in England where Nason trained. After coming to Canada seven years ago he worked at the East General Hospital in Toronto where he was head nurse on a surgical ward.

Nason has encountered no discrimination against his sex in the hospital, but people on the outside frequently think he's joking when he tells them he's a nurse. And he doesn't see that attitude changing in the near future.

He firmly believes, however, that there's a solid place for men in the nursing profession, both at the administrative level and in direct patient care.

Often male patients are embarrased to have young female nurses look after them and appreciate a male nurse, he says. Male nurses aren't assigned to female care areas such as maternity wards and he wouldn't want to be.

For a man, he says nursing is a career and he has to progress up the administrative ladder to adequately support his wife and family. Nason is married and has three children. His wife is also a nurse who works partime at the hospital.

Good career

Salaries are fine for a single person, he says but to buy a home and look after the family the nurse needs to advance to the more highly paid supervisory positions. A registered nurse in here first year earns about $645 a month gross.

"I feel well accepted by female nurses and the doctors," he says. "They see what I can do and how I perform. As long as the jobs done properly there is no complaint.

Male nurses seem to get along better with their female superiors than the women do, says Nason adding that female nurses frequently seem to respond better to direction from a male superior.

The Oshawa hospital is very progressive in its attitudes to male nurses and now several are in training he says.

Nason himself just drifted into nursing and enjoyed it thoroughly after he got into it. He trained the usual three years in a general hospital in England then took a further three years special training in a mental hospital.

At one point during his training he wanted to enter medical school but various circumstances prevented him from doing so.

Nason is a staunch advocate of on the job training for nurses and is concerned about the new emphasis on separating nursing training from bedside experience. University degrees are fine but all too often, he says nurses with degrees never get substantial experience in the wards just nursing.

Experience counts

It is essential that nurses in supervisory capacities have the experience to be able to relate to their staffs and understand their needs and problems, says Nason.

As one of the live coordinators of nursing services at the hospital, Nason spends almost all of his time doing administrative work. He is responsible for nursing services for special care areas - the operating room, the recovery room, the emergency ward, outpatients services, the intensive care unit and the coronary care unit.

Much of his work is devoted to committee meetings aimed at coordinating the various aspects of the hospital function to provide the best care for a patient in a specific area.

But in the future he hopes to be able to spend more time actually working in each of his areas of responsibility.

That way, says Nason, "I'll have a better idea what the problems are and how to solve them. There's a lot of scope for supervisors to be involved in patient care.

The coordinator likes to encourage his staff to accept responsibility and feels that the best kind of manager is one who has the ability to delegate so well that he can leave for a time and have everything run smoothly.

Male nurses usually do well in the technologically oriented aspects of nursing he says, as well as in administration. This is particularly important since hospitals are making ever-increasing use of highly sophisticated equipment.

Despite his satisfaction with his job, Nason still doesn't see a vast influx of men into the profession.

While he respects his female counterparts in nursing for their ability and expertise, he's still very much the gentleman, with typical attitudes about women's sensitivity and careers.

"I sometimes think male nurses need a bit of liberating," he says.

Alan Nason, a male nurse at the Oshawa General Hospital, is co-ordinator for special services at the hospital. Here, he talks with Janet Kirkbride at the coronary unit which is under his jurisdiction. He says that although there are still people who think he is joking when he tells them he is a nurse, he is well-accepted by his fellow staff members.

Whitby plan approval days away

A few more days of public comment and Whitby council will approve the formula that will guide the town's development to the end of the century

At a public meeting to discuss the draft official plan that emerged from seven months of study conversation with the citizens proposals and modifications council decided to give the public till August 23 for any final comments

It will meet August 27 to pass bylaws making the plan the official planning document for the town and to recommend its acceptance by provincial municipal affairs officials

An official plan is a conceptual statement of how the council wants to see Whitby develop over the next 20 or 30 years including principles for the staging location, size and type of various kinds of development - industrial, residential and commercial

A population of 100,000 is projected to inhabit a highly urban core of the town south of Taunton Road with three major commercial areas located to serve the large population - the existing downtown core redeveloped the Dundas Thickson area and a new commercial area around Rossland Road and Garden Street to serve future residential development

There will also be a smaller commercial area to serve the residential development expected to take place around the harbor

While Whitby of the future will include high rise development, apartments will be limited to 12 storeys and will be permitted only on arterial roads near commercial areas Maximum density will be 100 persons per acre

The plan maintains southeast Whitby around Thickson Road and Highway 401 as the major industrial area of the town and recommends that the town continue to develop industrial land to promote the location of new industries

A limit of 25 000 people is to be put on Brooklin's growth until it can be serviced with sanitary sewers and until a secondary plan is prepared by the planning board and staff

The official plan would permit only in-filling building in Brooklin Ashburn Myrtle and Myrtle Station while preserving the strong agricultural use in the northern part of the town

The Highway 407 parkway belt is recommended for in between Highway 7 and Taunton Road

Linking the whole municipality together is a series of creek valleys prescribed as open space

A major public recreational area will be the Whitby lakefront The plan calls for retention of the entire lakefront from border to border for this purpose and the development of active and passive recreational uses

It recommends a minimum of five acres of public open space for each 1 000 population and divides the town into a number of environmental areas or communities each of which will contain a variety of housing opportunities, some convenience stores parks and schools

The plan also outlines a system of arterial collector and local roads

A number of areas in the town are identified for later special study and for secondary plans - the Whitby harbor area, an area north of Highway 401 and generally west of Garden Street extended the heart of old Whitby, various areas where commercial strip development is a problem along Dundas and Brock Streets the northwest corner of the Thickson-Highway 401 intersection the area to the west of the Oshawa airport the projected development area around Rossland Road and east of Brock Brooklin Myrtle, Myrtle Station and Ashburn and the rural subdivisions known as Macedonian Village and the Almonds subdivisions

Whitby's official plan includes provisions for maintaining the downtown core.

Pickering airport

Four out of five owners have accepted offers

Over 80 percent of the property owners expropriated for the Pickering international airport have accepted the initial offers of compensation from the federal government.

But none of them has waived his rights to ask for further compensation, according to the deputy program manager of the airport project for the federal public works department

The federal expropriation act sets out a variety of safeguards to permit expropriated owners to take the government's initial offer and then to try to get more money if they feel the offer isn't up to the value of the property, says Art Lamport

A good many expropriated property owners have expressed dissatisfaction with the amounts offered

The government made initial settlement offers to the 712 property owners and the 357 mortgages involved in the expropriation at the end of April So far 343 of the mortgages and 572 of the owners have agreed to accept the money for the initial offers

The acceptance in each case says Lamport has been made entirely without prejudice against a final settlement "

Each owner has a year from the time of accepting the first offer to file a claim for further compensation he says

The first stage in reviewing the amount of compensation the government has offered is a review of appraisals by the compensation review committee which meets weekly to establish guidelines for payment Eventually the committee will consider each claim for additional compensation says Lamport

If the expropriated property owners are not satisfied with the recommendations of the committee, they can seek a settlement from an independent negotiator or ultimately appeal the compensation to a federal court for settlement

The people who haven't accepted the initial offer designed to permit residents to seek alternate accommodation or to reinvest have done so on the advice of their solicitors says the deputy program manager

Their solicitors advise that they await the outcome of a public inquiry board into the international airport proposal and transportation needs for the Toronto-Centred Region

Play camp prepares child for regular school

Small children are wanted in Whitby this summer to post mail paint picnic tables and play

A similar program which began in Guelph last year has kindled the interest of the Whitby YMCA in offering an outdoor playcamp for preschool children ages three to six

The children meet every Monday Wednesday and Friday morning from 9 30 a m to 11 30 a m during August behind All Saints Anglican Church at the corner of Dundas and Centre Streets in the Town of Whitby

Right now we are suffering from a lack of numbers" says Elizabeth Moore program director of the Whitby YMCA. "We started off with 26 kids but have gone down to about half a dozen

As part of the camp, the children are taken on outings to visit the library or to the post office to mail a group letter. A trip has also been planned at the end of August to take them to see a farm at Cafik Lake

I think the play camp is a vital experience in preparing the children for school," says Miss Moore "Teaching them how to share toys and play with each other is crucial

Another important aspect of the program which she has observed is the separation of mother and child each morning

"This is the first time they have been separated in a lot of cases she says it is an important time for both the mother and the child. The second separation will be when the child leaves home

Miss Moore says the fact that the children are learning to take instruction from other people than their parents will also help them in school

The two instructors of the summer program include a pre-school teacher and a university student working on her masters degree in family development

The creative activities include the usual painting, drawing and cut-outs but the main emphasis is on helping the children to express themselves

"The picnic tables for example, are painted with a big brush and water several times a day," she says

The physical activities include climbing devices which help the children learn balance and Miss Moore says they would like to integrate a "kinder gym

This is an activity where both mother and child are encouraged to pay together," she explains, a time when both can exercise while being together

Of course, the storytime is a favorite of all the children, many of whom are already looking forward to the day when they begin school

I've noticed that many of the children are anxious to go to school so they feel pretty good about coming to the play camp she says. "They even refer to the adults as teachers"

With openings still available for the play camp, anyone wishing further information can call the Whitby YMCA at 668-6868

Scott Gregory of Whitby receives art instruction from Mary Lynn MacKay during the summer play camp sponsored by the Whitby YMCA. A variety of activities are available to keep youngsters occupied over the summer holidays.

Women's lib paper girl does well as boy

Donny Osmond, Mayor Jim Pottcary and the kids of today are alright

These are opinions of Cathy Weaver, 9-year-old carrier with This Week, who says the mayor is "running a pretty good city," likes Donny Osmond records and thinks the children of her generation are as well behaved as old people

Cathy first got into newspaper work when she took over deliveries for her 15 year-old brother two months ago. Now, the only member of her family still in the newspaper business, she is saving the money she makes as a carrier to go the CNE later this month

"The hardest work of my job is the collections," she says, "but I like my job, it's fun and I like meeting people They give me tips sometimes

Although the largest tip so far has been 15 cents Cathy faithfully adds it to her "exhibition fund where, she says, she is looking forward to going on the "hurricane" ride

"I like it when my customers talk to me," she says. "They say things like 'Hello' and 'You're a paper-girl, not a paperboy!'"

Cathy says she agrees with women's lib and says, "I think papergirls do just as good a job as paperboys

Cathy will be going into grade four next fall at Woodcrest Public School where she earned all As and Bs on her last report card and where she modestly says that she's "one of the best in the class

The secret of her success as a carrier, she says is careful delivery of the papers, the same hard work that earns her good marks in school and going back for the collections when people aren't home

Members of the cast of the movie being produced at Canukr studios in Oshawa prepare for another scene.

C.F.P. polishes off fourth feature film in Oshawa

By Verna Mifflin

Hot summer breezes whip the dust from the street spraying the fence-enclosed wooden houses. At the well, an old lady sets her wooden bucket on the ground so that she can spend some time gossiping with her friend. A goatherder ambles along the poppy strewn path stopping at the church to greet the young workers who have rested their scythes against the fence. Geese and ducks roam the streets of the sleepy Ukrainian village.

Cut! Print it! roars director Walter Bachynsky.

Canukr Film Productions feature film is in full swing and, according to producer Walter Wasik filming hopefully will be completed by the end of August. Production was brought to a halt last fall when poor weather interfered. At that time about one-third of the 35mm Eastman color film had been completed.

C.F.P. is a fledgling company trying to establish a foothold in the Canadian film industry. They have produced three feature films in the past eleven years - Cruel Dawn, I'll Never Forget, and Proud Rider.

Proud Rider (1970), about the Satan's Choice motorcycle club was taped in English and filmed in Oshawa. All of the other films have been taped in the Ukrainian language.

After their first production, Cruel Dawn, (1962) a film club enterprise featuring a political message to European Ukrainians, Wasik and Bachynsky, formed C.F.P.

They purchased 180 acres of land east of Oshawa and refurbished a barn to house a studio with 28 foot ceiling, sound studio, wardrobe and screening rooms. The elaborate equipment was leased to a Florida company this spring to film a horror movie.

Although distribution is one of the major problems confronting the Canadian film industry, Oriana Film Distributors, Toronto, have circulated C.F.P. feature films in Europe, Australia and South America. Canadian made films have to go to the United States for distribution in Canada and, as Wasik says, "If the American company doesn't like your film it won't be shown in Canada.

Marichka - Mary in Ukrainian-their current feature film, is budgetted at a cost of $250,000 and will feature a speaking cast of 22. Altogether approximately 200 people will be involved in the final production.

Wasik has employed semi-professional actors who come from the Toronto area. Included in the cast is Audrey Chudoba, 25, as Marichka, and George Yemec, 23, as Yar, her childhood sweetheart. The company commander, who is the third member of the love triangle - the story revolves around, is played by Leonid Oleksiuk.

Audrey Chudoba works full time as a computor operator for a packaging firm, while studying voice at the Toronto Conservatory of Music. George Yemec is a professional poet whose third publication will go to press this fall. Assistant director, Michael Zenon has previously acted in the Canadian television series The Forest Rangers.

Producer Wasik also doubles as head cameraman. He operated a photographic studio in Oshawa for 20 years before turning to films. Director Bachynsky experienced as a set designer in New York, also wrote the film script for Marichka.

Most of the filming takes place in a reconstructed 1918 Ukrainian village. George Fras, production manager supervised the construction of the $70 000 set that was built by local carpenter George Hood. The buildings are authentic-not just "fronts".

One of the most spectacular scenes - yet to be filmed - is a fight between Yar and the company commander that takes place at night before a huge bonfire.

Singing and dancing for this spectacular scene will be by members of the Kalyna Dancers, Ukrainian National Federation, and the Promotej Ukrainian Choir.

C.F.P. will continue its tradition of making Oshawa the site of the grand opening of this film early next year. Bachynsky explains that this is the company's way of saying thanks to the people of the area who have cooperated in helping to film the production.

Pickering Town

Ashe challenges Williams for top job

PICKERING -- There's no doubt about it, says Deputy Reeve George Ashe; it's time for a leadership change in Pickering Town ship

And that's why Ashe decided to challenge Reeve John Williams and all comers for the job of mayor of the new Town of Pickering under regional government

Now in his second term on township council, Ashe says there was considerable pressure on him to run for the position of reeve in the last election, but he declined because he felt he hadn't enough experience in municipal government wasn't confident he could beat John Williams and quite frankly, he couldn't afford it

But that's all changed. Ashe says he has no doubt now that "we do need a change The leadership has been lacking to say the least, especially in the last year

He has the confidence that he can handle the job of mayor of the new regional municipality, can beat Reeve John Williams in the upcoming October 1 election and provide the leadership the township needs going into a totally-new government system

Deputy Reeve George Ashe is after the position of mayor of Pickering.

His confidence is given an added boost with all other members of council with the exception of the reeve "of course", rallying to his support

He says that under the existing regional legislation, too many responsibilities are left to the regional council and this is going "a step too far"

He says municipalities should have some control over planning and such things as subdivison plans to make their role within the region viable

These and many other aspects of regional government are things which must be given consideration, says Ashe, and in his mind, this means a lot of hard work during the first six months of the new system

The important thing to the success of the regional system in Ashes's opinion is co-operation among the members of the regional council. He says those people will have to sit down and talk to avoid intermunicipal conflicts

As to the impact of the City of Oshawa on the regional system, Ashe says only that "Oshawa is not the bogeyman as perhaps some seem to believe

In his opinion, he says "to negotiate and compromise is not a weakness because in the long run all parties concerned benefit

He feels he is qualified for the position because of his 20-odd years in a management role, which has given him the philosophy that the key to working with people is to take advantage of their strengths, not their weaknesses

"John's taken advantage of the weaknesses and not drawn on people's strengths", he says. "I can't see the good of that in the long run."

Ashe has definite views on what the job as mayor will be under the regional system

"There's no doubt that under regional government the emphasis will be at the regional level," he says "with the local level deemphasized

Because of this belief Ashe says it is extremely important that people at the local level believe in the new system The lines of communications must be kept open to allow a flow of information he says

To retain an effective local government within the regional system, he says he feels strongly that where possible the regional council should redelegate responsibility backs to the local level

Ashe sees leadership as key issue

PICKERING —— It's pretty hard to campaign when people don t known there's an election coming up, says township Reeve George Ashe

Ashe who has declared himself for the position of mayor of the new Town of Pickering under regional government, says one of the main problems he's run into in campaigning over the last few weeks is that most people don't seem to know there's an election on October 1

And, on top of that, he says that many people he's spoken to aren't really clear on what exactly regional government is, or what is means to them

He admits he doesn't know how to combat the problem, except to try his best to explain how the region will work when the matter arises Informing people of the regional government system is not the matter which really bothers Ashe, it's the election itself

"My concern", he says "is the people's knowledge of the election and getting them out to vote"

Unfortunately, here too he believes there is a problem, at least as far as township residents are concerned

In the past, municipal elections in the township were always held on Saturday, he says, but the regional election will be held on a Monday Because of that, he's hoping there will be a good turnout at the polls

Campaigning this time is a bit different for Ashe now in his second term on township council, because not only must he explain the issues at the local level, he has to explain the intangibles of the regional system

"I just explain in simple terms", he says, "that it s time for change in the structure of government and that in the last few years, the county system has become redundant."

Ashe is confident that the regional system can work with the right people to do the job, people who in his mind, can not only adequately represent the township, or rather town of Pickering but the regional interests as well

As far as the township itself is concerned, Ashe says there are really no big issues in this election, with the exception of his pushing to retain the managerial system

The township is now without a fulltime manager following the resignation of Charles Shelley, and Ashe says both Reeve John Williams and council are to blame in part for losing him, but in spite of that the system must go on

Beyond that particular issue, Ashe says his concern will be with the new town of Pickering and the region itself through what he calls "a new approach to negotiations"

The new township council must not go into the region with two and a half strikes against it, says Ashe, because of what he calls "John's approach" in dealing with people outside the township

He says that the reeve s personality has deteriorated over the last year and this "is not good for Pickering". What is needed, he says, is an open door policy in dealing with these people

An open door policy is needed, he says, if the new town is to effectively cope with such things as increased urbanization, the proposed international airport and the North Pickering Community

Pickering is unique, he says, in that over the last few years it has had just about everything thrown at it, from the airport to rapid urbanization, and there must be proper input into these matters to deal with them

Development is not all bad, says Ashe The North Pickering Community is an example

Ashe says he feels that ultimately the size of that community concept will shrink, and this is good

Ultimately, he says, Pickering will end up with a model community with worldwide focus Because of the attention it will get Ashe says the province can't afford to let it turn into a slum

As to the reeve's position that the township should have more involvement in the project, Ashe agrees but not to the same extent

The township, he says can't afford to "run" this project from the staff standpoint. If it tried, he says, the planning staff needed by the township would be greater than all the other municipal departments

Another thing Ashe wants to see change under the new system is what he terms the "parochial I m north, you're south" attitude within the township

The idea, he says, must be to work for the benefit of all residents of the township

But the key part of the upcoming election, says Ashe, will be the leadership question and he believes his concept of leadership, that being to "work with the people" is the right one for the township

Getting a pool is more than just digging

By John Bell
Staff Writer

Getting everybody into your new swimming pool isn't half as important as making sure everybody gets back out.

Long before you take that first dive into that sparkling new pool in your backyard — in fact, before construction actually begins — there are a lot of things to be considered to make sure you're not setting the scene for tragedy.

The first thing to look at is the bylaw on swimming pools enforced by the municipality you live in.

In Oshawa, every privately-owned pool must be fenced in, that fence being not under 48 inches in height and constructed in such a way that young children can't climb over it.

All gates must be same height as the fence and have self-latching devices located as near the top of the gate as possible, again to prevent children from reaching in to open the gate.

Whitby's bylaw is much similar to Oshawa's having the same minimum height requirement and standards of fence construction. If the pool is the above-ground type, then it must be equipped with a ladder which can be withdrawn or the entrance area must be fenced in.

In Pickering Township fencing requirements are similar with the height requirements ranging between four feet and six feet.

Drops requirements

Ajax has recently modified its swimming pool bylaw, dropping the fence requirement from six to five feet. The bylaw requires that there be a four-foot-wide apron around the pool and that the fence be the chain-link type or of a material of similar strength to discourage children from entering the pool area.

The bylaw forbids preventive measures such as installing barbed wire along the top of the fence, or electrifying it. As in the other municipalities, all gates to the pool must be the same height as the fence and have self-latching devices located at or near the top.

Unlike its neighbors, Ajax requires a building permit be taken out for pool construction. Going one step further, it also requires that the owner or contractor get approval for construction from the local hydro utilities on such things as outlets before a building permit can be applied for.

In all four municipalities the construction of the pool is subject to inspection by the building standards bylaw officer to make sure all is in order.

From the builder's standpoint, pool safety is a priority. Jim Hambly, manager of Coral Pools in Oshawa says it's his job to be totally conversant with the requirements and standards set out in each municipal bylaw on pool construction.

Hambly says his company does not recommend that a pool have a safety ledge, or as he calls it "a danger ledge". He says although intended to provide shallow water for children to enjoy, it's just a few steps for the child to end up in the deeper water.

Pool owners can purchase a variety of alarm systems as protective measures when the pool is supposed to be empty, he says.

These systems are so sensitive that if a bird hit the water the alarm would go off. Generally though Hambly says most people who buy pools are well aware of the need for adequate safety precautions.

One thing the new pool owner may or may not consider as a precaution is liability insurance.

Very intangible

John Aker, of Schofield-Aker Insurance in Oshawa, says liability insurance for swimming pools is very intangible because even though the pool owner may have $100,000 liability coverage, in the event of a mishap the decision of liability rests in the hands of the courts.

In the case of pool mishaps, Aker says it could be very difficult to determine fault.

If, for instance, someone held a pool party and during it a guest slipped on the pool deck or was pushed into the pool and was injured, the decision on blame or responsibility lies strictly with the courts.

Whatever the case, a person is not automatically covered when the pool is installed. He must contact his insurance agent to have his policy extended to include the pool and pool area.

Aker says even though his company recommends a minimum of $100,000 comprehensive personal liability insurance, he'd much prefer people opt for at least $200,000.

Aker recommends that a pool owner wanting insurance coverage check around to see what other companies offer since policies at individual companies may vary slightly.

From the police standpoint, spokesmen from the Oshawa, Whitby, Ajax and Pickering Township police department say there has never been a pool fatality in their areas to the best of their knowledge.

Oshawa youngsters wait patiently for the signal to jump into the pool

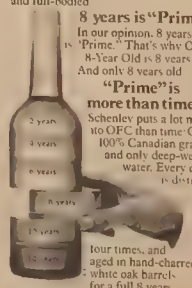
Picked in its Prime

The more you know about whisky, the better for OFC 8-Year Old. The Prime Canadian.

For starters. New OFC 8-Year Old is aged a full 2 years longer than either of the two largest selling premium brands. Thus, age alone, should make us better. But any good distiller will tell you, it takes more than time to make a whisky prime.

The truth about age

2-year Old Canadian rye is pale, harsh and unmatured. Around 12, it's darker and has begun to take on a heavy 'woody' taste. In between 2 and 12 at one point in time, Canadian whisky is in "The Prime of Life"; golden, mellow, smooth and full-bodied.



8 years is "Prime"

In our opinion, 8 years old is 'Prime.' That's why OFC 8-Year Old is 8 years old. And only 8 years old.

"Prime" is more than time

Schenley puts a lot more into OFC than time. Only 100% Canadian grains and only deep-welled water. Every drop is distilled four times, and aged in hand-charred white oak barrels for a full 8 years.

Finally we blend after aging

Why after? So that, despite differences from barrel to barrel, OFC never differs from bottle to bottle. Or glass to glass. 120 separate taste tests ensure it and each bottle carries this numbered back label. This is Schenley's Guarantee of "Prime 8-Year Old Quality. 'Prime Quality.'"

Thousands are switching to OFC and taste is the reason. Try OFC 8-Year Old. We think you'll find it a very rewarding experience.

OFC

"It takes no getting used to."

DON'T WORRY - BE SURE!

Sometimes the price is right!

By gosh! Sometimes you really can find a bargain.

With meat prices skyrocketting, vegetables at unbelievably high midsummer prices and even peanut butter going up, a true bargain is something that deserves headlines.

Hampton Gardens, a fruit and vegetable stand on Taunton Road at Hampton is selling beautiful, ripe, beefsteak tomatoes for the unbelievable price of 29 cents a pound.

In the chains the going price for these tomatoes if you can get them, is 69 cents a pound.

Says Newman

Political interference in staffing a 'no no'

By John Bell
Staff Writer

WHITBY -- Without a solid staff structure, the regional council could be in trouble, says Mayor Des Newman

Newman says one of his main concerns with regional council after the October 1 election is with the staff situation and how to stabilize it

There are a lot of dedicated and competent people, says Newman, who must and deserve to know where they're going after October 1, and what their responsibilities will be.

Unless the regional council recognizes this situation and moves to correct it as soon as possible to create a working staff structure, Newman says it could result in confrontation

"Unless the decisions are made dispassionately and with sensitivity he says "an unfortunate situation could develop."

To remove any possibility of inter-municipal confrontation, Mayor Newman says he is in favor of the hiring of outside consultants to analyze the situation

But, he says, consultants can't be used unless they are given clean terms of reference right from the start. There must be no political interference

Any political interference at all, he says, "could be used as a cover to make poor appointments". Even at that, Newman says care must be taken to ensure that the reports submitted by the consultants cover all aspects of the regional operation

Newman's second concern with the success of regional council is with the priorities agreed on by that council

"It seems to me", he says, "that council must line up its priorities quickly If not, it will flounder since there will be enough pressures to distract it to consider things which may not be necessary."

Simple priorities

The council, says Newman, must set out an orderly simple set of priorities, and, like establishing a workable staff structure "that will not be an easy job"

He's concerned that the council will be tempted initially to deal only with immediate things without realizing the problems that could result

This approach, he says, may sound sterile, but it is in fact the fundamental approach to take

Mayor Des Newman says staffing of the region should not become a political football

The first decisions taken by the new regional council, says Newman, will have an impact on the first year's millrate for the region, and that is "the punch" because if the wrong decisions are made initially, it will be too late to correct them

"We must not get boxed in", he says, "or we will have to live with those mistakes

An organized staff structure, a fixed set of priorities and the co-operation of staff and council will affect how the region will use its money, he says If they're wrong, it will hit the homeowner in taxes

The first regional council must watch itself financially, he says, because of the subtle effects provincial grants will have on decisions made in the first year or two

Council probably won't see the defects in the system until it has made heavy financial commitments he says

The municipal credit system must be watched carefully initially to ensure a balance, to ensure that no one municipality gets ahead of any other at the other's expense

Clarified bill

Newman's next concern is with the regional legislation itself, on which he says there must be more clarification as to its actual intent

For example, he says, planning seems to be a regional responsibility but that's not the way he understands it In this and other areas, he wants more clarity Planning he says is a serious issue and if all planning is at the regional level, he can see problems developing

There must be some planning responsibility left at the local level, he says, because leaving nothing for the local municipality to do would be self-destructing.

Local councillors, he says, have little power under the regional system, no responsibility to the taxpayer If people think the only intercourse possible is with the regional council, Newman says there will be suspicion and distrust

His last concerns are with conservation and boards of education. Conservation control is not local he says, but provincial So it's unfair of the province to establish the region and give the impression of control at the local level while retaining conservation authorities

As to the structure of the boards of education, Newman says he'd like to know who understands it He terms the decision not to make the board of educations boundaries coterminous with regional boundaries "hopeless

Another aspect of board of education role frowned on by Newman is the financial structure, and he defies anyone to explain how it's set up These decisions, he says, are unfair

Forty-foot lots necessary— White

WHITBY -- Planning board chairman Bob White says he doesn't like 40-foot lot frontages, but has to tolerate them

The reason, says White is because of the real and urgent need for all types of housing in the town housing which meets the needs of those in all income groups

He says his thoughts on 40-foot frontages were set out clearly last week at a public planning board meeting to discuss two subdivision plans for the eastern portion of the town

On both subdivision plans, residents expressed concern over the number and need for lots with 40 foot frontages

White says he can see 40-foot frontages adjacent to cul-de-sacs or on corner lots The main thing, he says, is to ensure adequate depth to the lots to compensate for the small frontage

In this day and age, he says, people have become accustomed to living in close contact with each other, but that doesn't mean in each other's laps, so it's important that the backyards of small lots be large enough to provide the type of environment and degree of privacy people require

He says if it was up to him he would set the minimum frontage at 60 feet but if this was the case many people couldn't afford to buy their own home

Planning board, he says, concerns itself at all times with what is best for people and the environment Although White admits 40 foot frontages are small and not to his liking, he still feels some are needed because of the rising cost

White is also concerned with the rising costs of homes and says a new system of pricing should be arrived at which takes the lot frontage into consideration

He says there must be adequate controls from the senior levels of government, he says

Des Newman defends the 40-foot lot

WHITBY -- Despite criticism from some members of council Mayor Des Newman still believes in the need for 40-foot lot frontages in the town

The whole problem over the smaller lot size says the mayor stems from the housing crisis in Toronto The result of that crisis he says has been the steady increase in home prices

This price problem has extended to the Whitby area, where with more and more prople moving into the town the supply of housing has diminished to the point where demand is pushing the prices up.

Newman cites one example where a home was listed last year at $36 000 but did not sell. This year with the housing shortage as it is, he says the same house sold quickly, but for $46,000

Municipalities are in a position to cope with this problem, he says, and Whitby has made every effort to do just that over the last three or four years

Burden on builder

The municipality has placed the financial burden on subdivision development on the builder, he says, and not on the existing residents of the town

Making the developer pay his way, he says offsets any militate increases to the residents of the town

Another aspect of the housing problem in Whitby, says Newman, concerns the average wage

In Whitby he says although the town may appear to be affluent, the average man makes approximately $8,000 or less a year. The obvious choice for these people would be to purchase an older home

But here too there is a problem because those now living in "existing stock" are not moving out to new houses because of the shortage, and the variety of housing types offered

This, he says, is exactly where the 40-foot lot concept comes into play

Although the majority of housing units in the new developments are the single family type, these developments also provide a broad range of housing types, and this says Newman is necessary to meet the demands of the people wanting accommodation

The smaller lot sizes allow for more units to be built, and affect the price of the home he says, although he admits it's not a large effect

No extremes

Newman says he's not aware of any problem in the town regarding the sale of 40-foot lots, but stresses that he's not saying the town should go to extremes in the number of smaller lots it allows

It must be considered, he says that some people would rather own their own home on a small lot than live in an apartment or in townhousing

He admits there is a difference of opinion on the smaller lots by council, but says he thinks the economics of the situation are not getting the consideration they deserve

Smaller lots allow for greater yield to the developer, he says, and should affect the price of each home It may not appear so, but a look at the situation in Metro Toronto where homes are selling for $15,000 to $20,000 more than comparable homes in Whitby shows the difference

The mayor says he is not advocating continuing to allow the smaller lots, but says with another 25,000 residents in the town over the next few years the need will exist until these people are in place and the pressure is off

Bandaging problem

Once the demand for homes has been met, he says, lot sizes will probably increase again. In some ways, he says, the smaller lot is a form of bandaging the problem

The mayor may favor small lot sizes, but not the concept of small parks, perhaps one or two lots in size, within new subdivisions, as suggested by Councillor Gerry Emm

These small street-parks, he says, are not functional and are difficult to maintain They're too small for active use and people today would rather go to the larger parks

Newman says larger central parks to service subdivisions are more important, and he's determined to have these set out in linear fashion to allow total use, but without interfering with residential area

Meatlegging may become a way of life

Bootlegging! Whatever happened to those marvelous entrepreneurs who for a modest 500 per cent profit would sell you just about any kind of booze you wanted?

Those were men of character. Men with a vision, sometimes double, and a goal to promote their communities. Now, with exceptions, they are a thing of the past: at least as far as booze is concerned.

From the depths of crisis once again, another class of bootlegger is rising. What's that you say? Yes, bootlegging is back but with a twist one would never have dreamed possible in this great age we live in.

With meat prices rising faster than Grandma's oven-fresh bread, bootlegging is well on the way back. Only this time the boys are flogging meat

You can picture the next great epic of the 70's blaring across the motion picture screen: 'HELD OVER FOR ANOTHER SMASH WEEK ---ROBERT MITCHUM IN 'I WAS A MEAT DETECTOR FOR THE FBI' - - the story of an ordinary man forced to turn

by john bell

in his friends in the National Association of Butchers after being caught smuggling spare ribs and being given a second chance.

Meatlegging could mean a whole new horizon on the unemployment situation. Men would return to the farms to raise beef. At night body shops would reek of fresh paint on cleverly disguised, hopped-up meatwagons capable of outrinning the fastest police car

The music business would resound with a million ballads to the glorious exploits of the meatleggers New movie stars would be born Herbert Hoover would return from the dead to restore law and order in the All-American way and horses wouldn't have to fear the glue-factory anymore

My but it all sound too wonderful to be true. In fact it isn't, but with prices going up and up, with not one step being taken to correct the situation on the part of government, this may well end up another true story

Maybe it's not as bad as we think Hmm?

Compensation boosted for Pickering airport

Expropriated homeowners on the Pickering airport site will have their compensation boosted by 10 percent and will receive an extra $3,000 for inconvenience.

Ontario Riding MP Norm Cafik announced yesterday that the compensation review committee has ordered an increase in the amounts offered already by the federal government to owner-occupants of expropriated land to reflect the increase in market prices since the 17,000 acres needed for the airport were formally expropriated Jan. 30, 1973.

The 10 percent plus $3,000 will be retroactive for all of those who have already accepted the initial offers of the government for their properties but will in no way prejudice any further claims for additional compensation on the part of the expropriated owners, says Cafik.

"They still have open to them all their rights under the expropriation act," he says.

The review committee is presently in the process of evaluating "benchmark" properties in a variety of categories to establish guidelines for future compensations and assessments. Benchmark decisions, says the MP, will be forthcoming soon

The decision to add 10 percent to all initial offers results from the rapid increase in real estate prices in the area between the announcement of expropriation and the time when offers were made and cheques issued.

The $3,000 hopefully will compensate for the inconvenience of relocation and the difficulty expropriated owners are having in finding replacement properties.

Anyone wishing further information should call Cafik's office in Ottawa at 613-996-1621.

K of C Tykes sweep two

Whitby K of C Tykes, who finished the regular season as league leaders continued their winning ways with a sweep of their opening playoff round against Port Hope in two games taking the opener at Peel Park 18-8 and the second game of the set 18-1 at Port Hope

Mike Welling and Ricky Dunphy shared mound duty in both games and came up with fine performances in both outings

In the Whitby contest the K of C's pushed across five runs in the second three in both the fourth and fifth and six in the sixth for the victory Mike Welling had 13 strikeouts to record the win

Murray McCorkell continued to swing a big bat coming up with a triple and single while Joe Doucet also continued his streak with a double and single Mike Welling, Mark Underwood John Wall each added a pair of singles and Rick Dunphy had a double

The game was never in serious doubt When the action shifted to Port Hope the outcome was again never in doubt as the K of C's won the game 18-1 and took the semi-final series

During the regular season the two clubs put up a great battle at Peel Park and the one-sided series was a disappointment for club officials who were hoping for a tighter series which would keep the club on its toes

Again, Mike Welling and Ricky Dunphy shared pitching duties and the young southpaw came up with steady performances with Welling also leading the club at the plate with two doubles and two singles

Mark Underwood and Murray McCorkell each had a triple and a pair of singles, Joe Doucet had a triple and one single, while Grant Leitch had a pair of singles John Wall had a triple and Brian Jimmo and Ricky Dunphy each had singles

The K of C's now await the winner of the Cobourg-Bowmanville series to go into the finals of the E O B A Tyke 'A' Championship

Their first place finish gives the K of C club the advantage of the odd game and club officials are hopeful that that the series will get underway this Saturday at Peel Park

Tire Midgets take two

The Canadian Tire Midgets also swept their semi final round against Port Hope two straight

Whitby had 16 hits in the game that became a runaway Kevin Roche with a double and single led the way, Dave Parish had 3 singles while Armand Robitaille Dave Sorchetti Terry Harper and Mark England each had a pair of singles Steve Sargin-son made his night complete with a double and two singles

Mike Rowley and John Turner with doubles completed the Whitby hitting

B & R Transporters should grab title

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

It's been a bad year for local lacrosse clubs

First the Brooklin Redman folded after losing 13 games straight in Senior A then Oshawa Green Gaels failed to make the play-offs for the first time since the club was formed in 1963 Ajax Knights were even forced to play a special play off sudden death game to reach post-season play against the Whitby B & R Transporters

It seems that only the Transporters defending Ontario champs have lived up to form this summer B & R, under coach Brian Brady, captured the league pennant again with a 18-6 record and hold the upper hand in the first play-off series against the Knights

In the first game for example, B & R blasted the Knights 26-7 scoring seven goals while playing one man short Actually, the score could have been higher

Add this up with strong goaltending by Paul Boland and Dave Crosby and the Transporters are a solid ball club

General Manager Jim Brady isn't over-confident about his club He reminds his players that the club whipped Huntsville and Brampton in initial games of the play-offs only to have the series extended to the limit

Over in the Ajax camp coach Glen Lotton is bitterly disappointed at his players attitude against Whitby

'My clubs seems to have gone into this series already beaten, yet we have the talent to pull off an upset he says We've beaten Whitby once this season so we can still be a winner I really can't figure these players out We finish the season tied for third place against Mississauga and Ennismore each with records of 12 wins and 12 defeats We play a special play-offs to decide which clubs makes the playoffs, and we play like peewee's

Lotton gave his players a verbal tongue-lashing after losing the first game.

Knights have a lot of talent to help them be upset winners Guys like Brian Rawn, runner-up in the scoring derby, Ron Brown, Jimmie Heslin and Rick Krane, must have a better attitude to a win against Whitby

Game number three starts tonight in Whitby with the fourth game set for Ajax on Friday. The winner will advance to the group league finals against either Mississauga or Scarborough Saints. The Saints are heavy favourites

Playing soldier fun, but it's a lot of work

By Tom Douglas
Editor

The sweat was pouring down my face and I was taking big gasps of air

It was so pitch-black out that I could barely make out the three shapes moving ahead of me Without warning I walked into the branches of a pine tree, scratching my face and knocking my glasses to the ground

Just ahead someone whispered that we had to climb an old wooden fence I got half-way over and fell on my head, pulling some of the old timber with me and causing a racket like a pistol shot.

Never again, I vowed, would I make a smart crack about grown men playing soldier when I saw a convoy of Ontario Regiment trucks and jeeps drive by. This was damned hard work

My second vow was that I would do something about the lousy shape too many months sitting behind a desk had put me in

Actually the whole situation was the fault of Jim Sabyan, our photo editor He once belonged to the regiment and still has a number of friends there So when one of them mentioned last week that he'd be taking a group of summer militia students on an overnight exercise near Bethany, Sabe opened his big mouth

'Tell you what, Nicholson, he said 'What do you say Douglas here and I raid them and really scare the hell out of them''

Before I could interject with a tale about a slipped disc or flat feet Captain Richard Nicholson allowed as how this was a terrific idea and he and Sabe were making plans

So at 7 45 p m uh, that is at 1945 hours last Thursday night a driver and jeep were at our disposal and we were on our way to Bethany One concession I had gained was that we could also take along Brian Evans a former jungle warfare instructor in the American Army

I figured if we were going to sneak up on 40 cadets with rifles even if they did only contain blank we could use all the help we could get

So there we were sneaking up on the group ahead as quietly as a herd of elephants browsing through a standing field of corn Even the dog I had been issued squeaked so Evans stopped long enough to shove them off and walked for a bit on my ankles to feel It's a good thing I don't type with my foot because the blister I have to lay would make it rather difficult

We had driven to within two miles of the camp the group had set up and then it was up to us to walk the rest of the way on our own

Each of us had been issued a Sterling submachine gun and we were to shoot blank rounds of ammunition

You have no idea how fast 400 rounds of ammunition goes when three trigger happy individuals are shooting it

I can't remember just exactly who fired the first shot or when, but even with blanks, it was a heart-stopping moment Lord knows how these people do it when it's live ammo and real enemy soldiers that they're facing

The next several hours are a blur in my mind, but with highlights that stand out — the smell of cordite the guttightening feeling of having an "enemy" patrol pass so close to you that they almost step on your boots, the ease with which Evans crawled into the bush and kept coming back with prisoners like a water spaniel retrieving ducks

There were some funny incidents as well. Sabe, who prides himself on being a good soldier, jumped about five feet in the air and opened up with a long burst of his SMG at a fellow lying in the grass at his feet who had started to say "Don't shoot, I'm one of the umpires

The fellow must still be seeing flashes and hearing a ringing noise in his ears

Then there was the group of student soldiers who ran out of ammo and as we walked by yelled: 'Bang bang, you're dead, sir

There was a very surprised farmer who came driving along the road where the battle was raging and came to an abrupt halt as Sabe stepped out in front of him with his gun

He turned out to be a good head and allowed the two of us to ride in the back as he drove through the "enemy" lines and we were able to wipe out quite a few of them

And there was the delicious taste of what I would normally consider rather blah canned stew after the whole affair was over. You sure work up a hunger (and thirst) during a battle This second want was satisfied by some of Mobun's finest courtesy of the men

I might add here that male chauvinism is still part and parcel of the Canadian Army The stew was cooked on a portable stove by the two female members of the outfit

Anyway the entire exercise was great fun I guess there's still a little boy in a lot of us that gets a kick out of playing war — as long as he knows nobody is going to get hurt

And another result of the whole thing as I mentioned earlier was that I gained a good deal of respect for the people that are involved in the regiment

We had all the odds stacked in our favor The officers were on our side since they wanted the men to get a good taste of what it was like to be under attack We knew the password where the men were dug in and we couldn't be killed or taken prisoner even though they could

On the whole I'd say that especially since most of them are part-time soldiers the Ontario Regiment has some pretty professional people looking after our interests.

Captain Richard Nicholson of the Ontario Regiment (right) holds a Sterling submachine gun on Editor Tom Douglas while a soldier frisks him. Members of This Week participated in an exercise last Thursday evening near Bethany in which they raided members of the regiment's student militia who were on a training exercise

Kitty takes her clothes off, but don't call her stripper

Katherine Clarke goes all the way to the United States to buy a $500 evening gown and then spends most of her time putting it on and taking it off

Katherine better known as Kitty Kool has been an exotic dancer for five years and last week appeared at the Karlin Hotel in Oshawa

'A friend of mine first got me involved in the business ' she said between sets ' I used to dance part-time while I was going to school — no one ever knew, of course

Her parents she said were at first violently opposed to the profession she had chosen Her mother was "flabbergasted" Her father became resigned to it though observing that if that is what his daughter wanted to do, how could he stop her?

Kitty, dark and voluptuous, said what really made her decide to get into the business was the former life she led

I just got tired of working in an office for almost nothing and smoking four or five packages of cigarettes a day

Although she wouldn't say how old she is she admitted that when she first began dancing she was under the legal age and that was five years ago She also refused to say how much she makes but it is estimated she is in the $200 to $300 a week bracket

When I first started all I had to do was take off my blouse ' she said ' I'm not ashamed of my work and I'm not apprehensive about what people might think about me I enjoy what I m doing, I enjoy dancing but I m not an exhibitionist I d rather leave my clothes on if the I had the choice

Not stripper

She said she doesn't appreciate being referred to as a stripper because of the vulgar stigma society has attached to the name from former times when stripping was operated by racketeers and synonomous with prostitution

Everyone says I m too conservative really she said I m a very quiet person at home In my spare time I play a lot of softball and I enjoy skipping and roller skating

Next year she wants to retire and has already made enough money to open a radio and television store in downtown Toronto her hometown

As to the opposite sex, she said she likes a well educated well-mannered man who is quiet spoken and accepts her as she is

But when you re on stage everyone is a blur, she added ' I look at it as just a job and I m a completely different person when I'm performing You've got to learn how to handle guys who get smart with you If you smile at them while you re telling them off they don t take you seriously

The biggest hazard to her career are cheap little girls who don t know any better and are willing to take off their clothes for $50 or $110 a week

Kitty works a total of six hours a week She dances about 10 minutes at a time although at some clubs she ll do an act which lasts about 20 minutes

When I first started I had to work out my own routine before I really got into it she said The dancers in the theatres used to be good and I'd go and watch them Now I very seldom practise except for once in a while at home

With clothes almost off, Kitty Kool, exotic dancer swings into action at the Karlin Hotel. Since she started performing beer sales have gone up.

The Canadian National Exhibition opens in Toronto today and one of the more popular exhibits, judging from last year, will be the Calgary Corral, sponsored by the Calgary Brewing Company. It features an authentic Western frontier town, including the local lock-up shown above. The unhappy individual inside is Mel Douglas, a visitor to the Durham region.

A first in furniture making is unveiled in Whitby plant opening

The establishment of a new plant in Whitby appears to make the start of sweeping changes in the furniture industry

C F M Industries Ltd was officially opened last Thursday in the Hopkins Centre Industrial Mall in the Whitby Industrial Park

C F M President Bruce Morgan is introducing a new method of making strong, longlasting and lightweight furniture frames that compare competitively in cost with conventional wood frames

"We're the only company in the world doing this kind of thing," said Morgan, explaining that furniture manufacturers from all over North America and Europe have already visited the C F M operation to investigate his revolutionary methods

When in full operation, the new plant will employ 25 people

Morgan began to put his ideas about furniture frame manufacturing into operation only last March when he picked Whitby as the ideal spot to service Ontario's upholstered furniture companies

"The prestige industrial park has a controlled environment and neighbourhood providing a location for my company that I can show with pride to my new customers" he says

The patented Senoform system used by C F M Industries results in substantial savings in both labor and materials over traditional wood frames says Morgan

"Since wood is growing increasingly scarce it is fast becoming necessary to find inexpensive alternatives

Insurance required on airport land

Residents of expropriated airport properties have been advised to carry full normal home insurance

While the federal government is charging expropriated owners who continue to live on their property a nominal rent of $1 a year, the tenants will be responsible for all taxes, normal maintenance costs, utilities, and for insuring the property explains F S Currie, assistant director of the Property Services Branch of the federal public works department

Occupiers of buildings on expropriated lands are required to carry fire and public liability insurance as long as they live there, says Curry.

"Rents set by the Crown reflect this tenant responsibility," he says

While this policy holds for all private occupants of federal property, Currie says it is particularly important on the Pickering international airport site

In cases where the owner chooses not to stay on his property and the government rents it to another tenant that tenant will be responsible for taxes, insurance and so on in 1974 and will be charged a lesser rent that year

If he moves in during 1973, his rent will include a suitable proportion of municipal taxes already paid by the federal government

The department of public works project team will fix rent at a reasonable rate related to local market condition" says Currie where rents are charged in the main to occupants of business premises, and tenants who are not former owner-occupants

Owners who weren't occupying their expropriated property at the time of expropriation and who were renting it to another family have no legal authority to terminate tenancies or increase or decrease rents, he says

"I mention this because I understand it is alleged one such owner of expropriated property attempted to give notice to vacate to his tenant with the apparent objective of moving in himself and enjoying the 'rent free' privilege"

Tenants, he says, have been advised that only the Crown has jurisdiction effective Jan. 30, 1973

The expropriated owner, however can collect rents from a tenant who continues to occupy the property after that date until compensation is paid. After that the tenant will be charged a rent reflecting the conditions of his Crown tenancy

Anyone who disputes rents set up by the public works department is advised to contact Dick Hoyt the expropriation project manager

Cold milk good for you up to 24 days

In this hot weather milk and milk products will stay fresh for up to 24 days if stored at the proper temperature

Check on the carton or bag of milk that you buy and in most cases, a coding figure will be stamped on it telling you how long the product will stay fresh

For instance, at the top of a milk carton embedded into the wax, you may find the figure "004" which means the milk was probably packaged two weeks before the date which the figures stand for Aug. 4 The milk was processed July 21

On the bags of milk, notice the figure on the little plastic tie. If it says "H4" in blue ink that means the milk will stay fresh until Aug 4

BEREAN BRIEFS

HOW DOES GOD SPEAK TODAY?

This article is a result of a recent message delivered on national television by a well known doctor of divinity in the subject, the way God speaks to people today.

In his sermon he mentioned four ways or means that God uses to speak with man. First he said "My bible says that God speaks audibly to some people". Second he said God speaks through "a still small voice". Thirdly God speaks, he said, through people. Lastly he said, God speaks through His inspired (God breathed word)

There is no quarrel with his statement that God speaks through His word, the Bible. Nor would we question him on his statement regarding God speaking today through other people or a "still small voice". It would have been wiser had that pastor qualified these statements (the still small voice and other people) by saying that if God is speaking through these means that we should always and in all circumstances test what is said. How do we test? By checking what is said with God's infallible word. Remember Satan can also speak through people, so if what is said by people for instance, cannot be supported by the Bible it must be rejected by the believer as not of God. If on the other hand it does stand the test then we must obey God's word and thank Him for it.

The portion of the sermon that we question and reject is "My bible says that God speaks audibly to some people". He went on to say that if God has spoken to you directly you must not judge me if I have not heard Him audibly or directly and I must not judge you and say you haven't heard him speak to you.

This type of statement coming from a Christian leader is at its best an irresponsible attempt at pleasing everyone, at any rate it is Unmitigated nonsense. At the close of Holy Writ God has not and does not speak directly or audibly to anyone today, to say otherwise undermines the word of God and leaves us open to all sorts of heresies. I have a book in which the author says that after praying and fasting he closed himself in his closet and continued to pray. Suddenly the roof of his closet opened and He saw Jesus. He went on to quote word for word what Jesus said to him. If we believe him we should either add what this new apostle says to Scripture or say to this man, beware of Satan the great deceiver.

Paul says in col 1 25 It was given to him to complete the word of God. When the apostle Paul dropped his pen revelation ceased. What that pussyfooting pastor did was open a can of worms that once opened is hard to close. Almost every false cult started with the premise that God gave further revelation to its founder. Every believer must reject this premise and Hold fast the form of sound words" that God has committed to us in His word. It must be our only authority in matters of truth.

Paul the great apostle to the gentiles prays (Eph 1 16 17) that the eyes of our understanding be opened so we may understand what What is the hope of His (God's) calling. Paul goes on to pray "That God may give you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of Him". Why? That we might walk worthy of our calling. Paul tells us that all scripture is God breathed and given for doctrine, Reproof and correction and instruction in righteousness. Why? "So the man of God may perfect thoroughly furnished unto all good works". II Tim. 3: 16-17. This then is how God speaks today, not audibly or directly, positively through people subject to His rightly divided word, but positively through His holy book.

What we need then is not another revelation but illumination.

Re-marriage is a personal choice

by rev. john a. robb

In a day when the incidence of divorce is increasing rapidly and when the present federal government has seen fit to widen considerably the grounds for divorce, it appears that we ought to once again take a hard look at the Biblical instruction relating to both divorce and re-marriage.

The Roman Catholic Church has always taken a very stringent view against divorce pointing out that Moses only allowed it because of the hardness of the hearts of the people but that from the beginning it was not so.

At the other end of the spectrum, we have the ultra-liberal end of Protestantism which is willing to condone divorce on any ground and re-marriage without restriction.

Between these two extremes there is the evangelical churchman who states that in his understanding scripture the sole basis for divorce is adultery and that on the basis of I Corinthians Chapter 7 and other scriptures re-marriage is not permissible.

This would appear to be the Biblical pattern although some evangelicals would presume to re-marry the innocent party.

The difficulty of establishing an innocent party of course, is very great! Certainly the other party vanished but was there not a contributing reason for doing so?

The there is the school of thought which states that if all this (i.e., the divorce and re-marriage) occured before conversion that all is forgiven and one starts with a clean slate.

All of this is even more difficult when one is confronted with the Biblical qualifications for elders and deacons who, it would appear, must have been the husband of only one wife (the widower is exonerated by Romans 7 Verse 2). This applies to ministers too.

In the pastoral round one often encounters the case of a party who has filed for divorce, lived common law for the last several years from which union he has had a couple of children, now his divorce comes through and he wants to be married to his common-law partner! What to do? You cannot unscramble eggs!

What about the mission field where the fellow has a half-dozen wives and is then converted to Christ? Does he just throw out the surplus five to become public property?

While admittedly it is a very difficult subject, the Biblical teaching seems fairly clear. It is up to you with the aid of the Holy Spirit to interpret it in your own case!

Where were you when you needed the Church?

Susan Gordon has been bitten by customers

A dog's life really isn't all that bad especially if he is a patron of the Canine Chateau.

Located on Simcoe Street South in Oshawa, the chateau specializes in the grooming of all breeds of dogs "excluding possibly a very large St. Bernard who wouldn't fit into the shampoo tub," says owner Susan Gordon.

"The grooming consists of shampooing, clipping, cutting nails and cleaning ears," says Miss Gordon "Poodles are frequent customers and sheep dogs and Afghans require a lot of grooming too because they are long-haired dogs."

She says most of the people who bring their dogs in aren't wealthy and that it is very important for dogs to be brushed well.

"People don't brush their dogs enough," she says "Even just 15 minutes a week of good brushing prevents the hair from becoming matted which can cause the animal to become more susceptible to skin diseases and fleas."

A shampoo and clip for a poodle for example, costs $10 and Miss Gordon advises that most dogs be clipped short for the summer.

Although she grooms her own three Afghans for show, Miss Gordon doesn't do this in her business because she says if someone lost a competition, they might blame her.

"I think it's true what they say about people looking like their dogs," she says. "At shows you see Afghans with tall thin owners with long hair. It is really true as far as temperment goes. A nervous person will have a nervous dog.

Ever since she can remember, Miss Gordon, now 23, says she read every book in the library about dogs although she didn't have a dog of her own until she finished school.

It takes about three hours for her to complete a shampoo and clip but she says the dogs, particularly poodles, enjoy the attention.

The footbone's connected to the headbone.

Think about it.
When you play tennis, you wear tennis shoes. When you walk, you wear good walking shoes. And when you work you wear proper footwear for comfort and protection.

Take a good look at your shoes. Make sure they're not getting run down at the heel. Change fraying laces. And check the soles to see that they're in good condition.
Sure footwork begins with proper footwear.

The sure way to safety is Self-Defence.

PENSIONER IN A BIND...

A DIET OF CEREAL AND POTATOES is all some old age pensioners can look forward to, says a story inside this issue. This Week's special feature talks about pensions, how seniors get along with each other, what they look forward to, the tough times but also about the good times, the fun, the fellowship, the senior's view of today's politics and then some.

editorial

Trudeau says eat meat

The Trudeau government has often been justly accused of dragging its heels in coming to grips with national problems like unemployment, foreign control of the economy, and the spectacular increases in food prices this year

Yet now that the Liberals have decided the food price issue demands a government response, they have come up with a practical, responsive plan that shows great promise of being effective

Last week Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau revealed a scheme to restrict meat exports to the United States where Canadian meat is in high demand, to quickly boost pensions, and to crack down on supermarkets chains that are ripping off the customer

He wisely chose not to follow the wage and price freeze tactic that has proved so disastrous and ineffective in the United States Hopefully the prime minister will be strong enough to resist pressure from the left and right urging the implementation of wage and price controls His tenuous grip on power makes him very vulnerable to such pressure from his major source of support, the New Democratic Party, which holds the balance of power in the house of commons

Signs indicate the beef prices are already dropping as a result of the new policies, or at least holding steady, instead of continuing their upward spiral

Trudeau's announcement of new pension increases is a long step in the right direction to relieve the hardship on old people who depend on that income alone for their livelihood. No one will argue that the increases are large enough. But they are substantially greater than previously and the quarterly increases area far more realistic response to helping pensioners cope with inflation. If necessary to tie these gains onto the October cheques Trudeau should recall Parliament just to approve the legislation.

While the Liberal Cabinet's statement that it will crack down on price-gouging by the chains is applaudable, one wonders how the government intends to do it. So far the feds have been particularly ineffective in convincing the chains to cooperate Profits such as Dominion Stores Ltd. reported last week - 34 cents on the share for the first quarter of 1973 compared to 18 cents for the same period in 1972 - can't be allowed to continue to rise unchecked

It is in this area that further clarification and strong action is still needed by the federal government

And what about the 92,970?

Ratepayers' president Ed Kolodzie has been complaining bitterly about the poor attendance of council members at last week's official public hearing for the proposed new official plan

Granted only five of the city's elected representatives showed up - one of them driving 120 miles from his cottage to the meeting. A number of others are on vacation

Of course it was important, as Kolodzie says, that councillors attend such a vital meeting.But even more important was attendance by Oshawa citizens

Only a few dozen public-spirited citizens showed up to take advantage of their last opportunity to contribute to the plan that will guide Oshawa's development over at least the next three years until a regional official plan is adopted. And that was what the meeting was all about...public contribution.

Public apathy is far more obvious and meaningful than council apathy in this case.

Although government is trying to open up more channels of communication with the public in an attempt to design programs to meet public needs, it appears Oshawa citizens are abbrogating their responsibilities to themselves and to their municipality.

Attendance deceiving

Some people seem to feel that a councillor's attendance at council meetings is a pretty fair indication of that person's capabilities and dedication to othe job, especially so near to an election.

But that's not the way it works. In Whitby, since the present council was elected last December, there have been 16 regular council meetings.

Of those 16, Mayor Des Newman attended 14, Reeve Tom Edwards 16, Deputy Reeve John Goodwin 15, Councillor Art DesJardines 12, Councillor Bill Irwin 16, Councillor Bob White 15, Councillor Don Lovelock 16, Councillor Gerry Emm 13, Councillor Dr. Ken Hobbs 11, Councillor Jim Gartshore 15 and Councillor Bill Livingston 14.

Logically the line of reasoning would be that those who have attended the most meetings are on the job. Not so. In many cases councillors miss meetings to attend other functions on your behalf. In others, the reason can be anything from vacations to having to work overtime

And the records only show that a member has attended some portion of the meeting, even if he only comes for the last five minutes

So before you jump to any conclusions, consider how many things you have missed because something else came up. Sure, running a municipality is important, but councillors are after all just human beings. If you really want a comparison, check into how many committee meetings the boys attend, how many public functions and the number of hours of homework each week.

You'll probably be just a little surprised. Perhaps even grateful.

Only the very best will do

by linda sutton

With nominations for the regional elections only a little better than two weeks away, politicians are coming out of the woodwork to announce their intentions to stand as a candidate for one office or another

You've got your oldtimers and your bright young people and your everhopefuls The usual bunch that shows up at any municipal election time

But the October 1 election will not be your typical election Regional government places a whole new set of demands on the people we elect to govern the Durham Region and our local municipality

They will have to be responsive to the needs of the total region as well as to those stemming from their own town

Reeves and deputy reeves for Ontario and Durham Counties already have had some kind of experience in this fashion.

But the rest of our elected folk have had little background in cooperating with other municipalities for the common good

The change is going to require an adjustment in this fashion and the people who stand for office at the regional level must be thoroughly aware they have to broaden their perspective They also have an obligation to the electorate to point out why Oshawa, Whitby, Ajax and Pickering may not get everything it wants, why sometimes one municipality will seem to benefit at the expense of another

Any one who is over 18, a Canadian citizen and a resident or property owner of a municipality can stand for election provided he can get 10 people to sign his nomination form

But should just anyone run?

The person who offers himself as a candidate this election more so than any in recent years will have to have special qualities

Political experience of some kind is just about a necessity. Getting the region off to a good start is going to be difficult enough without having a lot of amateurs bumping around trying to figure out the basics and getting used to the political progress.

New blood is always welcome but the tranfusion should be a small one this time and only of the highest quality

Having the interest of the community at heart is all well and good, but a candidate must have more to give - common sense, intelligence, know-how, an ability to learn, a critical and evaluative sense, a responsiveness to the electorate, a good, solid understanding of the function and authority of municipal and regional government, as well as constructive enthusiasm, and the desire to cooperate

The politicians elected to serve the region will have to consider themselves professionals, ready and willing to serve fulltime with no other outside career

That is going to place a hardship on a number of eminently qualified existing council members Can they afford to run regionally both in terms of supporting their families and in having something to go back to when their political careers are ended?

The public should not expect them to serve for mere honorariums out of the goodness of their hearts. Each candidate for regional office must make clear during the election that he will support a motion for decent salaries plus the ordinary benefits that any employee receives Only this way can the public ensure that it is getting the best government for its money

As the region evolves the position of local councillor will no doubt become the training ground for future local councillors. However, for the next three years - the term of the first regional council - local council chairs should be occupied by the talented and experienced members of the present councils who can't see their way clear to give up their jobs and run regionally. Their accrued knowledge will be a welcome contribution to the regional administration on a parttime basis

While this whole column has stressed the need for experienced people to be elected, that experience doesn't have to be of the 20-year variety A year or two on council is enough to familiarize most people with the terminology, the extent their powers and how best to get what is best for the municipality Anything more is a plus

Ever wonder how many miles are put on one of those cars that are given away in a raffle, what with moving from one display area to another?We understand that the car given away to the purchaser of a Fanfare passport had clocked up 1,100 miles before the lucky recipient was handed the keys. Also, it got moved around so much that the warranty got lost in the shuffle. The winner called city hall looking for it, but nobody had any idea what had happened to it

In an interview this week, retiring superintendent of development for the Ontario County Board of Education pointed out that most people have no conception of the amount involved in huge numbers. An example: If a stack of 100 brand new $1 bills is ⅜ inches high, how high is a stack of 1 billion bills? As high as a desk? a room? a three storey building? The answer, says McLelland, is just about 60 miles.

One way to cut down on the high price of meat is to buy and eat smaller quantities. But at least one Oshawa housewife last week was pretty irate when city supermarket apparently tried to make that decision for her. The lady purchased what she thought was a pound of Burns bacon for $1.35. She later found that the pound-sized package contained only 12 oz. of bacon and that the one-pound eight had been stroked out and replaced by a 12-oz. notification. Unfair, she cried, and returned the bacon to the supermarket, where she could buy a full pound of Schneiders for $1.77. The Burns bacon - an apparent bargain and advertised as such, - actually worked out to $1.80. As if food prices aren't bad enough!

Some people just don't seem to get the messsge...The management of a new highrise apartment building where one of our staffers lives has been having numerous problems trying to park its tenants, basically because of the growing pains of new building experiences. There have been numerous parking surveys to try and pin down the problem, changes in staff parking guards but all to no avail. In fact the way in which the matter has been handled has magnified the problem and upset the tenants to a point of uncooperativeness. Finally, the solution: parking stickers indicating the number of each parking spot that a car should be in. Tenants are now asked not only to paste the messy things on their back windshields, but they also have to pick them up personally instead of the management either delivering them, or putting one in each mailbox. The management would find the tenants a lot more cooperative if it practised public relations.

By gosh, some Whitby readers are touchy! A couple of weeks ago the Whitby edition of This Week ran an article about the anticipated December opening of a new self-serve liquor store in the town. In a light vein, the article referred to liquor store customers as 'boozers". That apparently hit a nerve with some Whitby residents who phoned to complain about the reference to both This Week and Whitby development commissioner West Winters who had made the announcement. It's too bad people don't show the same concern about things that really matter

The heartbreak of coming last in class

by jane milne

In two short weeks, parents will breathe the annual back-to-school sigh of relief

In this issue and in the one to follow, readers will find a variety of articles dealing with education ranging from the comments of provincial education minister, Tom Wells to the wide-eyed expectations of a little boy about to enter school for the first time.

This column deals with the latter and a 20-year-old memory

It was an enjoyable assignment interviewing five-year-old Robbie Moffatt last week, as he told me of all the wonders he anticipated finding when he began school. An enjoyable assignment yes, but after I couldn't help thinking how vulnerable his dreams were and remembering the harsh realities of the way school turned out for another little boy

Remember when report cards held the class in suspense as everyone waited to see who would be first - and who would be last?

I'll never forget the last child of Mrs Brown's grade two class at Pickering Public School in December, 1953

His name was Bobby. A short, chubby little boy with big brown eyes, he was from a large family and was always very quiet

As the teacher called out the 30-odd names and the standings of her pupils, I can only now imagine the thoughts that must have gone through Bobby's mind as he waited to hear his name

Everyone knew the smartest girl in the class, Diane, would be first and my sister Janet and I felt pretty good because we stood second and third. But, by the time we finished feeling so self-satisfied, I guess I came down long enough to see the look on Bobby's face that would haunt me all these years

The teacher's tone didn't change. She just said his name. Bobby then slowly walked up what must have seemed to him a mile-long aisle and accepted his report. The little square black and white folder which stated in black and white that he was last

He didn't say anything, he never did really say much. He just walked back to his desk, hands shaking as tears welled up in his dark eyes trying to smile as his classmates stared at him.

The quiet child that he was, no one ever knew what happened when he had the further humiliation of showing the report card to his parents

Thank God ranking is no longer added to the reports children bring home from schools of Ontario County. It was done away with as was the strap, which probably didn't cause nearly as much pain or damage

Bobby moved away from Pickering the next year, so I don't know what happened to the little boy who was told he was the worst in the whole class.

Did he develop to his full potential or did he merely live up to the expectations of others?

The sensitive parents and teachers are now looking at the child's strengths, not just his weaknesses. A little boy is not told how "stupid" he is for not reading well and that he's going to "fail", but is praised for so quickly finding the answer to the math problem or for painting such a pretty picture.

No one wants to think of the formal learning experience as something that will stifle the enthusiasm of all the Robbies who will start school this September or perpetuate the heartbreak of all the Bobbys. We all want school to allow them and to help them develop to their highest potential, while recognizing their own unique abilities.

So here's to you Robbie and all your classmates of 73: may your favorite colored crayon never break

Doctor key to flight refund

Sir:

Three friends and I planned to visit England this year and booked seats on a charter flight for July 1. Prior to our departure my friends received their tickets, but I did not. I phoned Universal Travel Club International and asked why. I was told there was no seat for me on the flight and I would have to leave one week before my friends.

I told them I could not travel alone as I have a heart condition, so would have to cancel my flight. They agreed and said they would refund my $224. In the last two months I have yet to get my money and have gone through a great deal of trouble with the travel firm.

They are trying to maintain that I had to cancel due to illness which is not true and the refund is being stalled. They have asked that I return my tickets to them so the claim can be processed, but I did not receive any tickets, but I do have a receipt for the vpayment

As I am living on Canada Pension, I need the money. Can you help me because I don't know where to turn now.

Mrs. Edith Burrus
177 Nonquon Rd., Oshawa

This Week contacted Chris Musselman at Universal Travel Club International on your behalf and discovered the hold-up is with your family doctor.

Ms. Musselman tells us the matter is being dealt with by the flight insurance firm which is waiting for a report to be returned to them by your doctor on your heart condition. As soon as that is received the insurance company can determine if payment comes from it or from the travel agency itself.

Because of the nature of your condition and the fact you did not inform the insurance company of this when you took out the insurance, the insurance agreement may be void.

Either way, Ms. Musselman informs us that you will be reimbursed as soon as your doctor sends back the form. We suggest you call him as soon as possible and see to this to ensure your cheque is sent quickly.

Sir:

I live adjacent to Kingside Park in Oshawa. I've asked the city to install a fence to separate my property from the park since the fence now there is constantly being damaged.

I'd like to fix up my backyard but because of this problem I can't. I ve contacted city hall but was told it could take anywhere from one to three years to have a fence installed. I've even phoned the mayor. Can you help me in this?

Mrs. Osten
570 Dean Avenue, Oshawa

This Week contacted the parks and property department of city hall and unfortunately nothing can be done about your problem this year, mainly because there is no money in the budget to do the job.

Other areas with similar problems are being done first. We have been told that funds may be allocated in next year's budget for the job. In the meantime, we can appreciate your position and sympathize with your problem.

Rossland Park

Where the action is might be a good slogan for Rossland Park's highrise apartments, pictured above. Whether you have a young family and are looking for a place where a nursery school and recreation centre are nearby or you are one of the singles crowd hoping to find rental accommodation where parties and social gatherings abound, Rossland Park's highrise apartments are for you. The Country Club gives you all the activities you could care to participate in and we offer an adults only as well as a family building. And for the top of the line in rental accommodation, ask to see one of our townhouses, shown at right. No matter what you have in mind, we have a rental unit that is sure to please you.

One of the many compliments we hear about Rossland Park is the fact that, unlike many rental complexes, there is a wide variety of building styles to choose from. Rossland Park is a totally-planned community, designed to please every taste. The newest addition to this community within a community is the Garden Apartment, pictured above. Featuring an inner courtyard with cascading ponds, these units offer the finest in resort-style living this side of the Mediterranean.

When Rossland Park says there is rental accommodation to suit all tastes, that's exactly what is meant. For those people who want something a little more private than an apartment yet feel they don't wish to rent a townhouse, the perfect answer is an apartment home. These two-storey apartments features an attractive foyer, party rooms and laundromats and a design that lends itself to imaginative interior decorating. Combine this withall the advantages of The Country Club and you have an ideal living style that cannot be matched anywhere else in the area.

Dehart joins region list

Alderman John Dehart has added his name to the list of declared candidates for regional councillor for the city

Already Aldermen Keith Ross, George Drynan and Bruce McArthur have announced their intentions to seek one of the nine Oshawa seats on the regional council All regional councillors will also serve on the Oshawa city council

Mayor Jim Politicary has made clear he will campaign for reelection October 1, as mayor of the city for the first three-year regional government term

Controllers Allan Pilkey and Christine Thomas, and Aldermen Alan Dewar Gord Attersley, Mike Breaugh, Mike Lisko, John Aker and Jack Wiley are also expected to run as regional councillors

Alderman Cliff Pilkey will likely run for one of the three local councillor positions open to Oshawa residents

Dehart feels his experience on Oshawa City Council and on the Central Ontario Joint Planning Board qualify him to stand for election as regional councillor

Planning, he says, is going to be the regional council's main concern

But, says Dehart, "It's not as if we are starting from scratch We've been planning this area at the Central Ontario Planning Board for a number of years But the implementation and detailing of broad conceptual plans and how they relate to the many communities of our region and how they all dovetail together into one mosaic will be a gigantic task and a job which will take men of experience "

The city alderman says that through long acquaintance with the political leaders from other parts of the region he has gained the broad understanding of the region necessary for a regional councillor

One of the first responsibilities of the new regional council will be to increase the awareness of the citizens of what the region will do for them, he says

The alderman stresses that people running for regional council will also be available to serve local interests, that regional duties will simply be in addition to the usual local council duties

The city bends to the powerful charges ratepayer

Sir:

Further to your editorial "Parking Problems", it would appear that the powerful in our community have placed property rights, i.e: OGH's ownership of Parkwood, over inherent human rights, i.e. the right of a neighbourhood to remain viable, to retain its identity and to have a reasonable quality of life

By the decision to go ahead at all costs, by the city's blessing on it, and by their contempt of the city's own laws, a dangerous precedent has indeed probably been set

That this was a logical outcome from the point where the city switched sides from the Simcoe Street site to the neighbourhood site is beyond question for the means always determines the end and once having taken a position contrary to the spirit of our zoning by-law, the city must perforce carry on trampling that spirit

But what of the future? Can any neighbourhood really be safe from intrusive, non-compatible land uses? I think not Especially if the intrusion is wished by a person or a group having real power

And even the neighbourhoods or properties of those who helped to emasculate our by-laws cannot remaing safe from the mounting pressures of pwer. Can a tide of apartment buildings or condominiums, for instance be stopped at one specific street or will not power - ever hungry for more power and strengthened by the city's past weaknesses - continue to push, inexorably onward

The city by its actions has said that when a conflict exists between a residential neighbourhood and an extremely powerful group, power shall win. The city is thereby feeding power with more power, not only at the expense of ordinary taxpayers, but, more important in the long run, at the expense of the City itself'

The City's message - loud and clear - we bend to the powerful and acquiese to their wishes

The public pay

Sir·

Last year's council requested that the Oshawa General Hospital back 50 of the 280 spaces used for parking in Alaxandra Park when the parking garage was built This year's council appears to have given a carte blanche to the OGH for more spaces - apparently without limit as to number and with no time limitation This would have the effect of permitting free parking to staff at the public's expense with at least two serious consequences

(1) a severe loss of public open space

(2) The public will be forced not only to pay for the upkeep of parking lots in Alexandra Park but they will also have to pay to park in the parking garage. Therefore they will pay doubly and it is highly dubious that the public will be parking for 10 cents an hour as they did when Alma Street was metered It should be remembered, that the loss of parking meter revenue represents a third loss to the public purse

I suggest that if there were any s such thing as free parking, that "free parking" should go to visitors to the hospital during visiting hours and to park users in the evening and also that if the Board of Governors wishes to give Staff "free parking" they do this in the parking garage which the OGH will own

Ms Bette Compston
Oshawa

EDITOR'S NOTE: This Week did some investigating into the matter. Mayor Jim Politicary says there is no way the hospital will use the parking spaces at A lexandra Park once the parking garage is completed. He says the city is quite determined to revert those parking spaces back into green space, keeping only a few spaces for park purposes. A complete report will be coming before city council soon.

Meet drug problems head on

Sir:

In the August 15 issue of This Week, I read with great interest your article about the drug dealer

The reason for my interest is because my four teenage children are the potential victims of such drugs being sold in the area

They are good children and, to my knowledge, don't abuse their bodies with drugs but the threat to them and all other teenagers is there

I hope your article has enlightened some of the people in my age group as to the fact that drugs are big business and make such dealers as "Alex" wealthy enough to retire at an early age

I don't know the answers to the drug problem except of course that we all must be educated We must look at what drugs do to our children's health as well as what drugs are doing to our society

Our society must, if it is going to deal with the problem intelligently, look at the subject head on

A mother who cares,
Oshawa

Stop sitting on the pot

Sir·

I give a modest hurrah to your advocating the legalization of marijuana in your last issue

I agree whole-heartedly that constant persecution and court action is not solving the "problem" our society is facing with the use of drugs, and fervently advocate that they, the soft drugs, be legalized, providing they come under some form of government control

In my thinking the logical step, since most cigaret manufacturers have already planned for commercial distribution of "pot", is to have the drug sold as is alcohol, in the local liquor store

With this controlled approach, at least those who choose to indulge would be assured of quality and safety in using what they buy. Another point to consider is the tax dollars the sale of soft drugs in packs would bring in

I, for one, am getting fed up of reading or hearing about the number of young people arrested for possession. We keep hearing about the cost of keeping a person in a penal institution for one year, so let's stop acting like children and admit that drugs are here to stay

Must we wait until everyone under a certain age is behind bars to realize the seriousness of the situation? Let's let the police get back to maintaining law and order, instead of playing the part of legalized burglars, or Gestapo-like 'friends of society

Legalize the damn stuff, bring it under government control, stamp out the pushers of harmful drugs, do anything, but let's stop sitting on the fence worrying about who's right and who's wrong

Bowmanville Museum brings back bustles, buggies and blacksmith.

Step into the past at Bowmanville Museum

H G. Wells' famous time machine doesn't have anything on the Bowmanville Museum

One step into the beautiful pre-confederation home set up as the historical museum on Silver Street in Bowmanville, enables visitors to vividly imagine themselves back in the days of bustles, buggies and blacksmiths

The home was a gift to the people of Bowmanville in 1961 and, in the 100 years since it was built (1861), it had only two owners. David Fisher who built it and lived in it until 1901 and then J.H.H. Jury

A few of the original furnishings remain in the house with displays set up to represent parlors, kitchens and bedrooms of the 1890s.

Complete with old fashioned tobacco, confectionaries and ladies' fancy dry goods is a general store on the lower level of the museum that illustrates early trading between merchants and the first settlers in the lakefront townships of Darlington and Clarke

It is believed that emigrants from the British Isles and United Empire Loyalists from the United States first arrived in the area at about 1794

Growth of the lakefront townships spread north with the Bowmanville Harbour becoming an important point on Lake Ontario by the year 1839

Artifacts of the Point Peninsula Indians are on display in the Bowmanville Museum complete with samples of diggings done by the Royal Ontario Museum in the area in the early 1960s

Pianos and other musical instruments made in Bowmanville by the Dominion Piano Company can be found throughout the museum as well as furniture which was made in the town

The Victorian area is also well represented in period rooms with settings of costumes and furnishings

Old photographs and documents give visitors information about some of the town fathers and original families of the area, which Marion Wiseman, curator of the museum, says are of interest to many tourists

Many people come in trying to find out information about their family tree and background," she says

Admission to the museum, which is open from May to October, six days a week from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m except Mondays, is 50 cents for adults and 25 cents for children

Six arrested on trafficking charge

A joint investigation involving members of the police departments of Pickering Township, Whitby, Oshawa, the Ontario Provincial Police and the RCMP, Oshawa detatchment, has resulted in the arrests of five area people and one Toronto man

The three-month investigation was directed toward methamphetamine trafficking and was co-ordinated by the RCMP drug section

On August 14 at 11 p.m., Norman William Edmonds, 38, of 32 Park Road North Oshawa, presently residing in Fantasyland Park, was arrested in Toronto together with William Copeman, 47, of 15 Orchard Park Blvd., Toronto and Donna Cluney of Oshawa

An RCMP spokesman said the three were charged with conspiracy to traffic in methampetamine and trafficking in methamphetamine

Approximately two and a half pounds of methamphetamine were seized with a street value of $9,000

Further charges resulted in the arrest of Lorna Lee Fairman, 20, of 2912 Beach View Ave., Pickering Beach, who was arrested Aug 15, released on bond She is to appear in court on three counts of trafficking in methampetamine

Allan William Knihnsky 28, of 390 Dean Ave., Oshawa was arrested and charged with one count of trafficking in methamphetamine. He was presently before the courts for previous charge of trafficking in the drug.

Edward John Howell of 458 Maple Ave., Pickering Beach was arrested and charged with two counts of trafficking in cocaine and one charge of trafficking in methamphetamine. He also faces a weapons charge as a result of a search of his home

"During the search of the residences of all of these people, significant quantities of illicit drugs were seized," said the RCMP spokesman. "Further charges and or arrests may be expected."

Edmonds who was arrested in a major hotel in Toronto, will be brought back to Whitby and tried on two counts of trafficking in methamphetamine and one count of trafficking in hashish (cannibis resin)

School should prepare students for life says Roberts

When building construction petered out during the Depression, George Roberts decided to become a teacher He ended up as Ontario County's first director of education

Originally an engineer graduate, Roberts was building huge complexes like the Royal York until the 1929 Crash dried up the well By 1932 he was out of a job so he entered teachers' college, graduated and began teaching in Oshawa in 1933

After a few years he worked himself up through the ranks until he became principal of Central Collegiate, principal of O'Neill Collegiate, and later went on to be the first principal at McLaughlin Collegiate

In 1966 he was named the first superintendent of secondary schools in the Oshawa public school board system, and when the county amalgamated in 1969, he became its first director He retired two years later at the normal retirement age

"My definition of education in the elementary and secondary school system is to teach the young the basic rules of reading, writing and 'rithmatic " he says "That doesn't change Education is also to pass on our intellectual heritage and to prepare the young to make a good living and a good life

The most radical changes he has seen in the education system in the past 40 years are the gradual development of programs to suit all kinds of interests and the emergence of the community college system as an alternative to university education

But, he has also seen a kind of deterioration in the education system

"Good teachers have never needed corporal punishment, but there has been a relaxation of standards of excellence," he says. "The demands made upon students today are less rigid and that is a loss to them in preparation for life "

Students of today are doing when they feel like doing it in a manner which suits their inclinations of the moment, he says Or, at least, that's the way it appears to him.

"There's too much playing to novelty," he adds very bluntly. "However I'm completely convinced that we have a damn good school system in Ontario County "

Clear-cut rules

When he was principal of a school, he says, he believed in having clear-cut rules and he was absolutely convinced that students preferred it that way

"I had a reputation for permitting leeway for the sake of originality, and that went for staff as well as students," he says "I put up with a lot of prima donnas because they were damn good teachers

Politics, he says, hasn't really hurt the quality of education in Ontario or Ontario County. The provincially imposed expenditure ceilings may be beginning to hurt, he says, but other than that, education "has worked exceedingly well"

"I think our county system of education is an excellent example of how something like regional government can work with very little politics

All during his career he says, he was interested in experimental education projects For proof, you need not look any further than G L Roberts Collegiate and Vocational Institute, an experiment in teaching and structural techniques which was of course named after him

"You know, " he says "I still can't refer to the school by that name It's very embarrassing really I originally wanted it named Sydenham one of the first industries to locate at the Oshawa Harbor I couldn't understand why the board was stalling on names "

Although he won't admit it, several people, including G L. Roberts Principal Chuck Powers, say if it hadn't have been for his support when the school was first proposed in an experimental way, the project wouldn't have materialized

"Let's just say that the interior design of G L. Roberts was so different from other conventional schools that a number of trustees were uneasy," he says

Reasonableness

He says he is an advocate of all the newer teaching concepts as long as reasonable constraints are employed with them so the teacher doesn't "go running away with the idea" He says no one technique is the total answer and they should be used to suit the occasion

"I think teachers still have to be detached, but they should encourage informality," he says. "I just don't like the patsy-walsy situation. I make a distinction between popularity and respect "

Although an advocate of most education techniques Roberts says he has also been violently opposed to what he deems "revolutionary" education philosophies

"Back in the 1930s there was an innovation sweeping the United States called Progressive Education," he recalls "As far as I'm concerned it represented amateurs and proposed freedom to the point of indulgence I spoke and wrote against it during those years and even made Time magazine twice. Fortunately the philosophy never did make much of an impact on education here "

In the future, Roberts says he can foresee more use of the community in education and big changes in continuing education so that students will be able to drop in and drop out of the system as they need education

For a lot of people, education has become almost a recreation," he says Night school programs have changed from job upgrading to recreational learning "

Radicalism gone

As far as he is concerned, the radicalism of the 1960s is gone and is being replaced by concerned students who rationally want a part in the direction of their own education

The radicalism of the 60s was just a pale reflection of the ferment in society and universities, a very pale reflection Now students want change and they're doing it from a constructive point of view "

Although he has been president of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers Federation, the Ontario Teachers Federation and the Canadian Teachers Federation, he says he disagrees with a lot of the current "propaganda" issued by these teacher organizations

He especially disagrees with statements about large student-pupil ratios

He says it has never been proved that the size of a class, within reason, will affect the quality of teaching

Roberts says he can point to no highlight in his 40-year career

"I had a retirement party at the Civic Auditorium and I said quite truthfully there was never a particular ambition I had beyond what I was doing," he says "I just wanted to feel what I was doing was worthwhile and it would lead on to something worthwhile "

And now that he has retired, he says he is just as busy as he was before He is chairman of several education committees, including the Oshawa and Canadian Chamber of Commerce Education Committees He is also a member of the Oshawa General Hospital board of governors and the nursing school Management committee as well as the Parkwood Operating Committee

"I enjoy my retirement very much," he says, adding "perhaps I let myself get too busy "

Train death under study

BOWMANVILLE – William R. Robbins, 83-years-old of 86 Scugog Street, died last Wednesday after the car he was driving was in collision with an eastbound CPR freight train.

Robbins was pronounced dead at the scene Bowmanville police report that the victim was attempting to cross the tracks at the Scugog Street crossing when the accident occurred

A spokesman for the police says investigations are still underway into the cause of the accident Funeral services were held on Saturday August 18 in Bowmanville with interment at Bowmanville Cemetery

Schools change to individualized timetabling

Four Ontario high schools are experimenting with new approaches to timetabling

The introduction of the credit system allowing each student to operate on an individualized timetable brought with it a number of timetabling problems, says Clarke Richardson, superintendent of operations for the Ontario County Board of Education

On individualized timetables, he says, students no longer identify with the normal class structure, their peer group. They just meet eight teachers a day as members of different groups, he says

Most high schools use periods of 35 or 40 minutes to accommodate all of the students' subjects in one day

The difficulty here, says Richardson, is that some subjects require longer teaching periods

"All of our schools are looking at ways to overcome some of the problems resulting from individual timetabling," he say

G.L. Roberts Secondary School was was the first in the county to introduce last year the two-day cycle with four "double" periods everyday and a long lunch break. This fall, Anderson Collegiate in Whitby and Central Collegiate in Oshawa are switching to the two-day cycle

Henry Collegiate in Whitby is trying another tactic

It too is going to the longer-period day, but it is also breaking the year up into two semesters so a student will take full credit in any subject in half the usual time. He will only take half the usual number of subjects in any one semester. This will also permit students to enter and graduate half-way through the year

"I want to stress", says Richardson, "that these plans are only introduced after exhaustive study by the staff and after there has been student and teacher involvement. They are experimental and the results will be fully evaluated "

Neither approach is free of problems, he admits

Teaching methods will have to be altered to cope with the longer classroom periods especially in less active subjects such as languages and social studies

A great deal of in-service work will have to be done by the staff, says the superintendent of operations

Both approaches make it easier for the parttime student to drop into school to pick up a credit, says Richardson, and extra curricular activities are more easily arranged

In all cases, he says, the impetus for change comes from the school itself

Student opinion is taken into consideration and each school tries out the new timetabling arrangement for an experimental period

The majority of students in each case supports the longer-period concept, he says

Dropping birthrate halts new construction

The Ontario County Board of Education had $6 million worth of renovative and building projects in various stages of completion under construction last year

This year, that figure is only $679,000

"The major factor in the decrease of plant renovation and construction this year over last is the lower birth rate," says Jim Russell, board controller of plant "We've caught up with building. We just have enough to handle the present birth rate

He says the lower renovation and construction costs have really nothing to do with provincially imposed expenditure ceilings

"Building is not under the same operating ceilings," Russell says. "We do have restrictions on new construction, but there is no real ceiling formula The province is just saying there is very little money available and they're cutting down across the province "

The board currently has "adequate facilities" to house the enrolment figure this September, he says Last year, 48,181 students were enrolled in the public school system and Russell says board officials are expecting about the same number of students this year

"We're looking for about the same figures this year," he says, "but that's because of all the new housing being built in various parts of the county. If it weren't for new developments generating more students, we'd be down and that's where the decline in the birth rate is showing

Current renovations at county schools include a $7,000 project at Dr Robert Thornton School which will replace the incandescent lighting with fluorescent lighting

The heating system and controls are being replaced at Uxbridge High School at a cost to the board of $28,000 while the 1911 section of O'Neill Collegiate is being renovated for $94,000

The only other major renovation underway is at Brock District High School where a wing is being added on at a $550,000 cost

Store front social services for region

The store front philosophy will likely be used to supply health and welfare services to many Durham Region residents

A committee of social service administrators within the region has proposed that a large central welfare office be supplemented by field offices staffed with welfare field workers, health unit personnel, mental health people, social workers from the Children's Aid Society and people from other social service agencies

The two field offices proposed would not necessarily be staffed by representatives of all the agencies on a fulltime basis, says committee chairman George Thwaites, social services director for Whitby

"They would work as a team whenever they are required to do so," says Thwaites, adding that this kind of a store front office would be a one-stop service to people with a variety of problems and concerns. Often, he points out, a person utilizing one of the services is also receiving help from at least one more

In addition, by providing a combination of services in one office, savings would result by avoiding duplication of facilities and personnel

When regional government takes effect January 1, social services will become a function administered at the regional level.

The committee has proposed to service the region by the establishment of a large central office to take care of the bulk of the population requiring welfare assistance and supplementing this with the store front offices in Uxbridge and Pickering

A field office in Pickering Village, says the committee's latest report would serve the new towns of Ajax and Pickering. The Uxbridge office would administer welfare benefits to the people of the new towns of Uxbridge, Scugog and Brock

The rest of the region would be served by the central office, likely in Oshawa

Although the committee considered the establishment of a store front office in Bowmanville for the new town of Newcastle, it decided, since that area is now served by a central office in Cobourg, that this procedure should be continued.

The store front technique, says Thwaites, will permit the regional social services department to provide personal service in a large portion of the region while minimizing expenses

The field offices will be equipped with only the necessary service personnel while all of the administrative work generated by these offices will be handled at a regional administration, separate from the central welfare office

The regional office will consist primarily of the regional supervisory personnel - the director and deputy director and the financial wizards - and their clerical staff who aren't directly involved in worker client relationships explains Thwaites

It's normally better to separate these functions, he says

Combines many

At present there are five municipalities with fulltime social service administrators and 13 townships and villages with a parttime administrator or field worker

They are presently administering a combined budget of $1 62 million

The Liederhort Tosters of Austria performed at Club Loreley on the weekend. They were in the area as guests of the County Town Singers of Whitby

Says MPP McIlveen

Open, practical and responsive is approach needed to education

Education should be decentralized even below the board of education level says Oshawa MPP Charlie McIlveen

McIlveen, who is chairman of a legislative committee studying the utilization of educational facilities, says that the people in any one community should be able to dictate what they want to happen in their schools

A report from his committee to the Legislature says basically the same thing, he says

The report recommends that the Legislature investigate the possibility of allowing "community action committees" to establish themselves wherever they want to direct the educational trends in their community

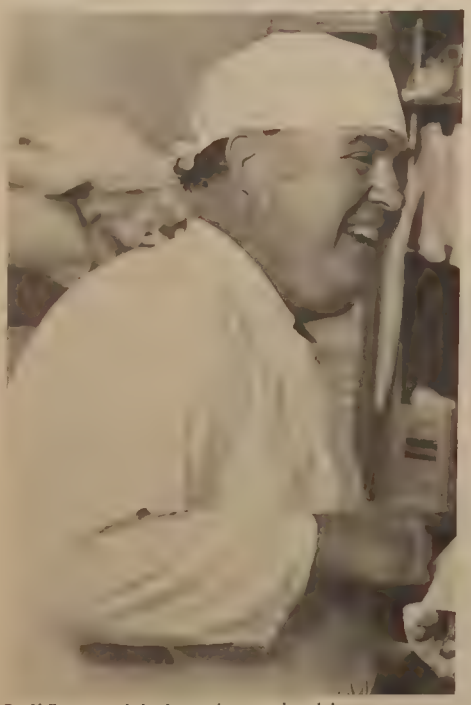
"Every community is different," says the Conservative MPP "There is no one plan that can be used as a pattern throughout the province. I think the people should decide what they want happening at their schools "

The citizens' councils, he says, could be composed of any number of citizens The citizens would not be elected to the council, but would have "automatic membership" to it if they lived in the community. The citizens would in turn elect their officers

"The boards of education would still have their administrative functions to peform," he says "But, because of the growth of the regional education systems, there is just no way a board representative can represent his whole community and this is where the councils would benefit the system."

If they wanted to, he says, the councils could form to ensure that a certain program is developed within their schools, or to fight a program, and then disband

So far, he says, there has been no ministry feedback on the report, although boards of education have generally replied in a negative way to proposals. The public, on the other hand, has sent in dozens of letters about it, he says, and more than 6,000 copies of the report will be distributed by September



Doc McIlveen: practical and responsive approach needed

No walls

McIlveen and his committee have been studying education facilities and resources all over the province, in the United States and Europe.

He says he is particularly impressed with what is known as an "open sector, or no-wall university" These types of universities, mainly in Britain and Europe, use advanced techniques to educate such as television and correspondence courses

"There are no physical buildings attached to the university" he says. "It costs the students about one-twentieth to 'attend the university, and only about one-third per student for university operating costs

He says he would like to see the province adopt this type of university, perhaps in Oshawa, as an ideal method of providing education "from the cradle to the grave"

Since McIlveen has chaired the committee it has been looking at the community use of schools and how the community as a whole can benefit from them, and that includes any type of structure in which education programs are being carried out It has also examined the extended school year

"Under the extended school year," he says, "a student would be able to go to school 12 months a year if he wanted to . This means he would be able to finish his secondary education in 3½ years instead of five."

Unconventional

McIlveen has some rather unconventional ideas when it comes to education

"I would like to see a co-operative apprenticeship sponsored and subsidized by the government," he says. "Students would be able to utilize whatever facility is in the community to get practical training, but get paid for it. What's the sense of putting up a huge electrical lab when there's one already in the community?"

McIlveen advocates giving students theory as well as practical experience in business, arts or technology by placing them in related community businesses, commerce and industries

"There should be no pay differential between what a student is making or the worker," he says. "That way there would be no union problems and the student would be just as valuable to the employer as any other worker. The province would have to subsidize it and recognize the program, of course "

He gives this as his own personal view of what the education system should be like:

"I'd like to see a non-structured system of credit courses right from elementary school through university where units of learning would be given merit and not grade levels," he says

"I would also like to see schools opened to the community for whatever purpose it wanted them open for

"The community should also develop its children's curriculum along with the teachers, and there should be a central, open sector university, preferably here in Oshawa."

McIlveen , who hopes the committee will be able to "self-destruct" by January says he is convinced that the appropriate Legislature ministries will adopt his committee's report

"I think the proposals are sound and the people want them," he says. "In adopting them,the ministry must not get ahead of public opinion. It will take the public a long time to accept innovative changes that we have proposed "

Professional writer to help city students

As a practising, professional writer, Wayland Drew of Oshawa will be working with school children to help them realize how they can also express themselves through writing

Drew is one of 30 artists who will be working with elementary and secondary school children throughout the province as the result of grants under a $90,000 Creative Artists-in-Schools program introduced recently by the Ontario Arts Council.

The new program invites Ontario artists to submit proposals worked out with a school or board in the province. Upon acceptance the Arts Council funds 90 per cent of the artist's fee to a maximum grant of $1,000 with the school or board contributing 10 per cent of the fee, plus travel and material costs

Controllers at the Oshawa Airport traffic control tower cope with 100,000 take-offs and landings a year. From left: Jim Savage and Frank Salter on the alert.

Politics hasn't hurt education says MPP

Politics has not interfered with, but has controlled, the quality of education , says Oshawa MPP Charlie McIlveen

He says the politics at neither the provincial nor county level has tended to hurt education in the county

"If you're talking about provincial expenditure ceilings, I think it's a question of how much money can the taxpayer afford to pay for education," he says "The province had to cut down. Ontario was paying more per capita for its education than any other province."

Since ceilings were imposed, he says, the cost has plateaued and gone down

"What politics has perhaps interfered with is the little red school house atmosphere," he says. "When the province began to regionalize education into the county systems it perhaps dehumanized the system, and maybe we have to change in order to get back to that atmosphere, but on the whole, we have standardized education."

He admits that ceilings have hurt some phases of education, but certainly not the teachers, who are complaining about having to work under such high student-teacher classroom ratios.

"They did some experiments in Sweden with classes gradually increasing from 18 to 32 students and found there was no change in the eventual by-product of education in the system on the average," he says. "There are places, such as special learning classes, where students do need individual care, but in regular classrooms, I don't think it makes any difference."

Picked in its Prime

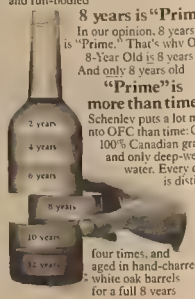
The more you know about whisky, the better for OFC 8-Year Old. The Prime Canadian.

For starters: New OFC 8-Year Old is aged a full 2 years longer than either of the two largest selling premium brands.

Thus, age alone, should make us better. But any good distiller will tell you, it takes more than time to make a whisky prime.

The truth about age

2-year Old Canadian rye is pale, harsh and unmatured. Around 12, it's darker and has begun to take on a heavy 'woody' taste. In between 2 and 12, at one point in time, Canadian whisky is in "The Prime of Life": golden, mellow, smooth and full-bodied



8 years is "Prime"

In our opinion, 8 years old is "Prime." That's why OFC 8-Year Old is 8 years old And only 8 years old

"Prime" is more than time

Schenley puts a lot more into OFC than time: Only 100% Canadian grains, and only deep-welled water. Every drop is distilled four times, and aged in hand-charred, white oak barrels for a full 8 years

Finally we blend after aging

Why after? So that, despite differences from barrel to barrel, OFC never differs from bottle to bottle. Or glass to glass. 120 separate taste tests ensure it and each bottle carries this numbered back label. This is Schenley's Guarantee of "Prime" 8-Year Old Quality "Prime Quality." Thousands are switching to OFC, and taste is the reason. Try OFC 8-Year Old. We think you'll find it a very rewarding experience.

Changes reflect family of schools concept

Administration of the Ontario County Board of Education has been revised to more accurately reflect the "family of schools" principle

Superintendent of operations Clarke Richardson explains that the reorganization resulted from the retirement of two key members of the administration and the need to be responsive to changing conditions

Under the new organization, all secondary and elementary schools under the jurisdiction of the board have been assigned to one of eight "families", each under the supervision of a superintendent Each "family" includes two or three secondary schools and their feeder schools

All of these superintendents of program also have county-wide responsibility in specific subject areas

D. J. Kettle, superintendent of the Dunbarton-Pickering family of schools, also is charged with county-wide supervision of health and physical education, business education, data processing, and board-municipal cooperative programs

W. J. MacDonald looks after industrial arts and home economics as well as the Ajax family of schools including the Ajax High School and the Harwood Secondary School and all their feeder schools

S. T. Finbow is the 'father' of the Whitby family of schools and in charge of social sciences for grades seven to 13

The Oshawa West family of schools centering on McLaughlin and O'Neill Collegiates has Dr. C. M Elliott as its superintendent

Elliott takes over responsibility for the county's math curriculum

Howard Hemstead is superintendent of the Oshawa South Centre Schools - Vanier, Central and Roberts and their feeders as well as having charge of English for students in Kindergarten to grade six

A.B. Woods has jurisdiction over the Oshawa East schools - Donevan and Eastdale and their feeders, as well as over the subject areas of science an outdoor education.

D.A Sutton is superintendent of the Central Ontario Family of Schools, those schools in the north part of the county. He also has responsibility over music, dramatic arts, art and the performing arts

The superintendent of curriculum, R. V. Sheffield, looks after communications arts and English for children in grades seven through 13

J. T. Sterling, superintendent of teacher education, is also responsible for technical education across the county

B. R. Walker, superintendent of personnel, has jurisdiction over special education programs for all students

The superintendent of administrative services, T. J Heath, coordinates social studies curriculum for pupils in Kindergarten to grade six

Although the number of consultants for the county is being reduced, consulting service are being introduced iin English, math and science

The reorganization, says Richardson, allows the use of consultants in slightly different ways since some have been given a role in the development of curriculum and others in the implementation

In general, he says the reorganization increases the emphasis on curriculum design, development and evaluation, on teacher education, and on the family of schools concept.

Superintendant Clarke Richardson - the "family of schools" principle

Immunize

Health Minister Dr Richard T. Potter has urged Ontario parents to be sure their children are adequately immunized before they go to school in the fall

A ministry study, in 37 of Ontario's 43 health units, revealed that one in every five children entering school in September 1972 had less than adequate immunization against preventable diseases

Of the 128,884 children in the study, 99,881 were kindergarten children, representing 79 per cent of all children at that school level in the province

About 75 per cent of those studied had been immunized against diphtheria, pertussis (whooping cough), tetanus and polio Smallpox vaccine had been given to 65.5 per cent of the children

Only 58 per cent -- in some areas, less than 30 per cent -- of the preschoolers had been vaccinated against measles

Less than 20 per cent of the children studied had received rubella (German measles) vaccine

"With this rate of immunization, outbreaks of measles are inevitable.' Dr. Potter said

Diphtheria, pertussis tetanus and polio immunization -- which can be given in a single inoculation -- should be completed by the time a child is six months old

A reinforcing dose should follow a year later Measles and rubella vaccinations should be given at 12 months of age or shortly after

"Every child should have protection against these preventable diseases as early in life as possible," said Dr Potter

Parents can have their children immunized by their family doctor or at their local health unit

Carnival to raise money for MD

A plan by some Oshawa children to have fun while helping someone at the same time is in the works for Aug 25

Shelly Murrant of 215 Vancouver St., daughter of Mr and Mrs James Murrant, will serve as Ringmaster at her home with the help of her brothers sister and friends for their neighborhood carnival against muscular dystrophy

The children are viewers of "Rocketship 7", a children's show that originates in Buffalo and encourages such carnivals to aid dystrophy victims.

All money raised from Shelly's carnival as well as all others throughout Canada, will remain in Canada for research and patient service programs

Should it rain on Aug 31 the carnival will be held Sept 1 For further information, call 576-3568

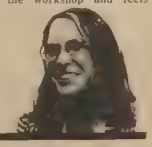
$170 a month doesn't go far

A cereal and potatoes diet is all pensioner can afford

by linda sutton



The income from Canada's pension scheme combined with high food prices is just about enough to keep many of Canada's old people from starving

Widows and widowers who have no other source of income are hardest hit.

Canada pension plus the guaranteed annual income supplement gives a single person over 65 $170 14 a month or just over $2040 a year to feed, clothe and house themselves let alone pay for medicine and a little bit of entertainment.

Many of Oshawa's old people are fortunate enough to live in city or provincially-built apartments for senior citizens which means their rents are substantially less than they would pay in other accommodation

But it still doesn't leave them with much

A typical case

Mrs M lives in Westmount Lodge where she pays $52 a month plus hydro and telephone for a bachelor unit She has to spend about $23 a month on drugs, just under the $25 minimum required for eligibility for help from provincial and municipal coffers The $70 balance has to pay for food, clothing, travel and entertainment

Cereal and potatoes

Although she sometimes has hamburger, Mrs M rarely eats meat Often she just has a bowl of cereal for breakfast and a potato and perhaps a piece of cheese for supper If she gets hungry during the day she may make herself a piece of toast with a dab of honey on it

That's the major difficulty," she says "Buying food. I know I'm not getting a well-balanced diet but I can't help that. I just can't afford to buy the proper food. But a piece of bread will take the hunger away

This way of eating is common for most widows living on meagre government pensions in the city projects. The rising cost of food is making it even more difficult for them to buy enough food and get a good variety of nutrients

But Mrs. M., like so many others, is very proud and independent. She has a son who takes her shopping and buys her things occasionally but she won't tell him that she can't afford to eat properly

She enjoys her independent existence, in fact A widow for 17 years, she has lived in Westmount Lodge most of the past 10 years, except for a stay in Hillsdale Manor when she was ill

I'd rather be found dead in bed than go back to Hillsdale," she says "There's no privacy, not even when you dress

Good living

Mrs M likes her small bachelor apartment furnished comfortably and practically with some of the furniture she kept when she sold her home 10 years ago

There's lots of companionship in the building , yet each can return to her own room and close the door when she wants to be alone

A gracious, silver-haired 79-year-old who has outlived three fondly-remembered husbands, Mrs. M. likes being with people her own age because they understand each other's problems Although she has a very close relationship with her son and his family, she says she wouldn't like to live with any of her children

This feeling was expressed by a number of other senior citizens

Confined to his one bedroom apartment for the last four years, Turner used to miss being able to putter about the garden or the workshop and feels such facilities should be included in future senior citizen developments, although he can no longer do it himself

Mentally active

He also misses being able to get out and around although he continues an active interest in politics and world affairs

Eighty-two-year-old Arthur Turner has lived with his wife of 50 years at Halliday Manor on Bond Street East for 16 years He agrees senior citizens should live in their own communities, but he would prefer to see a townhouse arrangement so each one could do a little gardening

People are going to be sorry they went for regional government in five years' time, he says, arguing that it will cost the taxpayers more money because of property reassessment and in terms of council salaries

"If I were 40 years younger," says Turner, "I'd run for council "

Married couples don't feel the pinch as much as the single pensioner. Many of the men receive a disability pension as veterans, the top pension being the equivalent of the lowest paid civil servant. And their wives receive the regular pension as well

Bill and Ev Taylor, one of 12 married couples in the Owen D. Friend apartments on Normandy, are fairly satisfied with their lot although they are concerned about how the widows get by. They have enough money to eat well but not lavishly and emergencies are a problem although Taylor is so independent he wouldn't let on

Mr. Taylor keeps himself in trim and has his own car which he carefully maintains. Mrs. Taylor can't get around as easily because of rheumatism

They keep themselves busy in their cedar-ceilinged, one-bedroom apartment doing the housekeeping, watching Watergate on television, and keeping an eye on what is going on outside

A strain

Their main difficulty, they say, is with the "tension" in the building. They find their neighbours gossipy and sometimes pushy

A major problem is the lack of recreational facilities There is no common room where the residents can get together for a chat of a game of cards, says Taylor, stressing that this kind of facility is badly needed to provide some variety in the old people's lives

Many of them never leave their rooms, he says

He is also concerned about the location of the building at the top of a hill The pensioners have to walk down a long hill to the food store on Ritson Road and trudge back up with their groceries, he says, noting that several have already collapsed from the effort

"It's a lot better for old people than it used to be " he says. "I wouldn't want to have to live with children. It's nice to see them regularly, but you'd be in the way if you lived with them and their pace would be too hectic for you "

Others aren't as fortunate as Mrs M. and the Taylors to have close relationships with children who live nearby. In some cases all of them live far away in other cities Too often the children live right in the city but don't visit the old folks

Turner agrees that the situation for old people has improved in just the last five or six years. Young people today are more interested in looking after senior citizens, he says

"We're not ignored," he says, we manage to get through. But the last pension increase was eaten up by the cost of living, before we even got a chance to benefit

Senior citizen housing projects a boon to low-income pensioners

An apartment in a senior citizens' building is the choice and the relief of many of Canada's old people

With pensions of $170 a month, single pensioners can't afford to spend lots on rent But rents in city or provincially built senior citizens apartments are far less than those charged on the open market

Oshawa has the major supply of such accommodation within the Durham Region although Whitby has a few units and is building 80 more Ajax is also making plans to build a senior citizens apartment

Because of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation regulations housing built and operated by the Oshawa Housing Company is somewhat more costly than that provided by the Ontario Housing Corporation which gears rents to income

But still the rents in the three city projects are low ranging from $48 for a bachelor unit in Halliday Manor on Bond Street East to $74 50 for a one-bedroom apartment for a married couple at the Owen D Friend Apartments on Normandy

Westmount Lodge, close to the Oshawa Shopping Centre is the most popular Rents there are $52 for a bachelor

The city has been negotiating with OHC to take over the Oshawa Housing Company units and run them on a rent-geared-to-income basis says social services director Herb Chesebrough

This would mean substantial savings for most pensioners and in some cases a reduction to $37 from $74 50

To be eligible for a senior citizens apartment a person must be 65 years of age or over. The city apartments do make room for someone on a disability pension from the age of 60 on

The Oshawa Housing Company restricts residents to those who have assets less than $7,000

Retired education director

Fads come and go but a good teacher can teach anywhere

Grade 13 will be dropped, kids will start school at the age of three and Ontario schools will operate all year round

These are some of the prediction's made by Jim McLelland, retiring at the end of August as superintendent of development for the Ontario County Board of Education

In 40 years as an educator, McLelland has seen teaching fads come and go and he's seen a number of productive innovations adopted

But in his first teaching job, as the only teacher for 57 kids in a one-room school near Owen Sound, McLelland practised many of the methods that are today described as "new" and "modern"

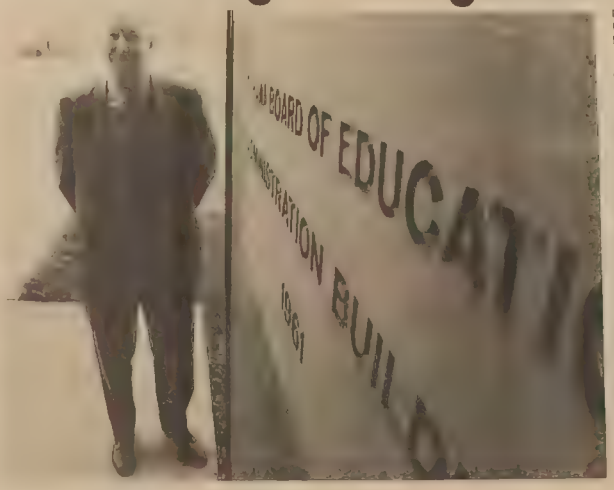
Good teachers have always used the same approach to teaching, regardless of the type of school he says

In that one-room school he taught everything from grades one to eight, encouraging his older students to work on their own, compare notes when necessary and help one another and the younger children too This smacks of the open concept school where children are allowed to get up and walk around, and talk among themselves, he admits

"Kids have to blow off steam" he says, " and they can't do it sitting in rows of desks, being perfectly still and looking straight ahead "

Allowing the children some freedom to move around and talk among themselves usually eliminates the fooling that goes on in the traditional classroom, he says

"I had no discipline problems at all. They were all too busy working "



Jim McClelland: a good teacher can teach anywhere . . .

Some teachers and many parents aren't very happy that schools are turning away from the formal classroom situation and allowing the children more freedom and therefore more responsibility, the superintendent concedes

"Parents usually say 'make them mind' I say make them think'."

Mixed ages

The integration of children of varying ages into a single class situation - the old little red school house thing - is coming back and McLelland believes it's beneficial for all of the children involved

This approach is being tried this fall in a number of Ontario county schools introducing an early childhood education program from children between the ages of four and six. Instead of having a junior kindergarten, a kindergarten and a grade one class these schools, he says, will have classes comprised of children from the three age groups

It allows children to develop relationships with older and younger children and it permits the child to move at his individual pace without regard to 'where he should be for his age' thinking

Eventually, says Mc Lelland some three-year-olds who are ready may be taken into the program

He sees a possibility too that the province's day care program will be taken over by board's of education This may develop to include some kind of noon-hour and afterschool care for children of working mothers

In volunteer programs of this nature, he points out kids stopped getting into trouble with neighbours and police

Sports for spirit

Organizing sports for students was always an effective means for McLelland to keep kids out of trouble and get them interested in some productive activity At one time he was thinking of turning pro with the Detroit Olympics hockey team and he also played football with an Owen Sound club

At both his first small school and at a school in a tough area of Kitchener in the pre-war years, Mc Lelland organized sports teams for the pupils and built up a lot of school spirit at the same time

School sports is also an effective way to develop a good relationship with and understanding of the students, he maintains

While McLelland doesn't believe teachers should get 'palsy-walsy" with their students, he feels that a demonstration of interest by teachers in their students in an informal manner creates good morale in a school

But he believes teachers must be respectablé models for their students, behaving appropriately with good manners and dressing and grooming properly. He objects to blue-jeaned teachers with scraggly beards and long-unwashed hair

A teacher should be an example to his students McLelland feels

Despite the lack of jobs for teachers in the early 70s, the superintendent stresses there will always be jobs for good teachers

In the past, he says, too many people get into teaching because they couldn't do anything else or because, in the 60s, the money started getting better and now is quite good

Thin ice

Even now, he feels, there are a number of teachers in the school system who shouldn't be there, who haven't the talent or the dedication to do their job properly in view of the ever-increasing demands on a teacher

There are a hell of a lot of teachers now skating on thing ice," he says

New math is a subject resented by a good many teachers and even more parents, he points out mainly because they don't understand it

New math relies on teaching children to memorize times tables and long division practices If taught properly, children should be able to figure out an answer to a mathematical problem even if they haven't memorized it says McLelland. However, the teacher sometimes doesn't go on to teach the children the useful shortcuts that used to be taught alone without any of the concepts, he says

McLelland is concerned that too much is being taught to children in earlier grades, particularly in the maths and sciences

The main thing elementary schools should do, says the superintendent, is teach reading and communication skills. Everything else follow from that

He also feels that the age a child enters school should be flexible to accommodate a child's readiness Already the early childhood education program is offering three start dates in the year

A child will not learn unless he is ready McLelland stresses Conversely, he says, a child who is ready but does not have the opportunity to learn will go out of the period of readiness

Superintendent Jim retires

Jim McLelland, superintendent of development for the Ontario County Board of Education since its inception in 1969, is retiring at the end of the month

McLelland started his teaching career in a one-room school - Union School Section 4, Sarawak and Kepply - near Owen Sound

After six years there, he taught at a school in Kitchener and for a time he was a physical education instructor for grades nine and 10 at a Kitchener high school

He enlisted in the army at the outbreak of World War II and served in Canada and Europe, retiring with the rank of major in 1946

McLelland then was appointed provincial inspector of schools for Peel County with sole responsibility for the entire county

Two years later he was posted to Timmins where he was the only school inspector for a vast area of northern Ontario

He came to Whitby as inspector in 1959 and joined the county board 10 years later as superintendent of program

McLelland just plans to take it easy in the future but he admits he'll miss teaching, and his association with students other teachers, the board members and the county board administration

Poor turn-out

Hearing adds little public input to plan

Ratepayers' President Ed Kolodzie says he was disgusted with the turn-out of elected officals at the offical plan hearing last week

Ald John Aker says he drove 120 miles from his holiday at the cottage to attend the meeting

Planning board chairman Ald. Bruce McArthur says he won't make alibis for either board or council members who failed to attend the meeting

Around 30 interested citizens attended the meeting called Wednesday as the official public hearing - the last chance the public will have to add input into the city's proposed official hearing.

Only two aldermen who are not on planning board Aker and Ald. Alan Dewar, attended the meeting. Ald Keith Ross and Ald. Mike Breaugh, who are on the board, attended as well as board members Bill Rutherford, Dave. Brown, Hugh Armstrong, and of course McArthur

There were just enough members attending from the 11-man board to constitute a quorum for the meeting which followed the hearing

Kolodzie says he was "just disgusted" that only eight of the people who will be involved in giving the plan approval showed up to the meeting, especially since the plan is so important to the furture of Oshawa

"Only six board members and two aldermen could show up to the meeting, and yet 11 or 12 aldermen and councillors showed up the night before for baseball game at Alexandra Park," he says

Aker says he drove into Oshawa from his cottage because he deemed the meeting so important. He says he didn't attend the baseball game because he didn't think it was important

McArthur, although he says he's not going to make alibis for anyone and admits that "it's nice for people to get a firsthand knowledge of what the public says", maintains that there was no real reason for councillors or board members to attend the meeting.

"We were making note of all the comments coming from the public," McArthur says. "A complete report of those comments will be forwarded not only to members of council but planning board as well who have been dealing with the problems of the officials plan for years

He adds that "although it is a weak excuse, people must remember that this is the time of year when a lot of councillors do take vacations, himself included, which they deserve

"I think it is a point well taken ," McArthur says "Kolodzie said I was there only because I had to be there to chair the hearing Well, I think that was a gross overstatement."

McArthur says that no "real major considerations" were brought out at the hearing by the public in any event, but the points that were raised will be weighed before any decision on the plan is reached

McArthur says the only real point raised was also brought up at the previous meeting on the plan. He says people are still confused and think that, because their land is designated open space, their property will be expropriated

He says those lands under private ownership along the creek valleys were designated orginally as public open space. Because of the objections by residents, he says that will be changed to private open space

Although he says he can give no guarantee that future councils in the next 25 years will not want to expropriate that land for public open space, he maintains that the chances of this occuring are remote

It has been the city's policy to buy up open space land as it comes onto the market, says the planning board chairman The only reason creek valleys have been designated as open space, he says, is to protect the land from future development and roads

He says it is up to the people to ensure that their lands are not encroached upon by other individuals who think just because the land is designated open space that it is accessable to the public

This can be done, he says, by putting up signs fences or by complaining to the police when someone trespasses

McArthur says all the public input will be reviewed by the board and recommendations forwarded to council on Sept 6. He expects a council meeting will be called before Sept 17 to adopt and amend the plan if necessary. Both meetings will be open to the public

Now you are probably wondering how that affects our Music Director David Lennick. Well since a very early age David has been collecting records and has now accumulated over 10,000 of them at home. He is a virtual walking encyclopedia on the subject of recorded music and thus we feel is the right man to select the music you will hear on CKLB Radio. Having a personal record collection of over 10,000 recordings may not be a prerequisite for the position of Music Director — but it helps.

Branch, Aldwinckle new Parkwood officers

Parkwood, the home of the late Colonel and Mrs R. S. McLaughlin and Oshawa's tourist showplace, has a new administration

Chairman N. C. Millman announced this week his retirement as chairman of the Parkwood Operating Committee. Walter R Branch is his successor

Jo Aldwinckle has also been named executive director of Parkwood

Both appointments are effective September 1

Millman, the committee's first chairman, has often been referred to as the father of Oshawa planning and was a member of the city's planning board for 17 years During that period plans for the civic square, the civic auditorium were undertaken

He also served on the public utilities commission

From his arrival in Oshawa after World War One as the first engineering graduate to be employed by General Motors of Canada, Millman had close ties with the McLaughlin family and their home

Former city alderman Walter Branch recently retired as personnel manager for Fittings Ltd. after 28 years of service He has been president of the Oshawa Chamber of Commerce, the Kinsmen Club and the Rotary Club Branch has been the chairman of the board of management for the civic auditorium and arenas since 1964 when the auditorium opened

Journalist, columnist, editor, author and traveller Jo Aldwinckle is a well-known Oshawa personality who founded the Oshawa Folk Festival from a desire to bring about a better understanding and appreciation of all the culture, talent and traditions that flourish in this city

For the last two years she has been free-lancing and working as public relations officer for the Whitby Psychiatric Hospital The staff tabloid, Staff-Liner, that she has produced monthly for the hospital,

Linen serviettes, a unique decor and superb coffeeare a few of the extras the Ali Baba Stead House offers diners

Located on Brock Street North in Whitby, and with outlets also in Waterloo, Stratford, London and Hamilton, the interior of the restaurant brings visions of Arabian nights to patrons entering the cool dark quiet rooms complete with glass beads, archways and likenesses of camels and their mysterious masters

Although not yet licensed, —(the management is hopeful of being granted one any day now),, the Ali Baba offers an enjoyable meal for the whole family, including specially-prepared children's dishes served in portions suited to smaller appetites.

Steaks are the specialty of Ali Baba with lobsterand flaming shish-kebab adding to the slightly high-priced bill of fare which includes salad with choice of several dressings, baked potato with sour cream and chives or panfried potatoes, hot homemade rolls, butter, dill pickles and olives

Good service includes seating by the maitre d'hotel followed by the prompt yet unhurried taking of orders by waitresses who are particularly patient with indecisive children

Desserts of parfaits, cheese cake and strawberry shortcake also delight the children as well as adults

The piece de resistance however, is the Arabian coffee - a rich, very strong blend served in demi-tasse cups. A perfect ending to a meal enjoyed in an interesting and unusual atmosphere

Ambulance men ready and waiting for emergencies

By Garnet Cowsill
Staff Writer

When you're hot, you're hot. And when you're not Well, you just sit around waiting for a call

That's basically how the Oshawa ambulance unit men work. Sometimes they go like crazy Two weeks ago they answered more than 200 calls. Other times they just sit around waiting to be summoned to an accident or a routine call

On June 1, 17 ambulance men and their supervisor, Grant Ogden, moved into the Oshawa General Hospital very quietly and assumed the operation from the Oshawa Fire Department. They didn't make a hullaballu. They wanted people to think the situation was well in hand, and of course it was

Now, after a little more than two months, the unit is dispatching most of Ontario County ambulances with its new and impressive-looking "squawk-box"

The ambulance men, under the direct supervision of the Ontario health ministry's emergency health services, are all highly trained and qualified, servicing the area with the most up-to-date equipment

Dave Brown, left, and Clarence Armstrong and the feet of Russ Charter.

Most of them have from one to seven years experience and come from all over Ontario to be moulded into one, cohesive unit of paramedics. Ogden, although only 27, has 15 years' experience but says he only claims 10 years

People find it strange that he could be so young and have so much experience, he says, but it's really not that odd. His father owned an ambulance service and he began helping him when he was 12 years old

During the day the unit has three ambulances ready to answer calls, two men to each. At night and during the afternoon shifts only two ambulances are on . It takes 17 men, three dispatchers and Ogden to make sure the unit is prepared seven days a week Some of the men work 12 and 16-hour shifts. Most work an average of 48 hours a week

The transition period after assuming the unit from the firefighters came off fairly well, says Ogden The men didn't know each other before but they worked hard at getting things together

Each man can work with any other man, he says The team system of two men working together as partners for weeks on end is frowned upon. Ogden likes the men to work with everyone so they don't develop the bad habits that partners often can

"They're just little things that partners can get in the habit of doing," he says. "But sometimes they show up. I like to think that in an emergency any one of the men can work with another man and be an efficient team."

Same attendants, same feet . . . . . .

First aid plus

A lot of people think that ambulance men are just first aid men. But there's much more to it than that says Ogden, and having a first aid certificate is only an initial requirement

To become an ambulance man you must have completed Grade 12 and have a valid senior first aid certificate Then you undergo intensive in-service training where you are taught lifting techniques, how to use the equipment, plus a little bit of medical theory

After that, you must attend a 160-hour training course at Camp Borden where you are taught the finer techniques like how to deal with an emotional patient, communications, rescue and safe driving tips

By the way, every person who drives an emergency vehicle is subject to the same laws as you or me Ambulance drivers cannot exceed the speed limit or go through a red light. If a man is unfortunate enough to have an accident while he is in violation of the highway traffic act, he can be held liable to the courts

However, when a person driving his car hears a siren of an ambulance or other emergency vehicle, it is incumbent upon that person to pull over as far to the right of the road as possible and stop until the emergency vehicle has passed

Ogden says all ambulance drivers have been known to step outside the bounds of the traffic laws once in a while when they are handling extreme emergency cases

Slow ride healthier

The police here are pretty good," he says "If we drive too fast or go through a red light when it is necessary they tend to be looking the oother way. But if we ever do it unnecessarily we can expect trouble

Any driver who is caught breaking traffic laws could be suspended from his duties by the ministry, he says

The men are fully aware of that In fact, they say speed has just recently been de-emphasized as a really useful factor in safely transporting emergency cases

It is much healthier one of the men told me to give a cardiac patient a slow, smooth ride and get him to the hospital in a relaxed condition than to tear through the streets bouncing all over the place with a siren going and risk him getting excited or having an accident

The unit's custom-made ambulances are impressive They allow for more room, more equipment more passenger space more passenger comfort more everything except price when compared with the old station wagon-type Cadillacs

The ambulances used now are custom-built Ford and Dodge vans The newer ones are 18 inches longer than a normal van. Fully equipped, it is estimated that they cost $12,000 A stripped "Caddy" would cost in the neighborhood of $25,000

There isn't as much horsepower under the hood but the men say there is enough to get you where you're going and back safely They claim they would much rather operate the van ambulances than the station wagon kind

Fully equipped

The vans are equipped with a mobile stretcher (one that can be wheeled), seating accommodations for the attendant and room for a second stretcher They have oxygen tanks to be used as resuscitators with mask adapters as well as suction equipment run off the van's motor for removing foreign matter such as blood or vomit from the patient's mouth, wound, or throat

The vans have their own heating and electric generating systems as well as the standard emergency vehicle ornaments, siren lights and "bubblegum machine

Ambulance attendants by law are not allowed to administer drugs of any kind or even intravenous treatment so they don't carry thosethings, that would normally be in a doctor's little black bag. They do, however, have a complete stock of every size bandage, gauze and adhesive tape andmouth-to-mouthresuscitating valves and masks to fit even the tiniest infant

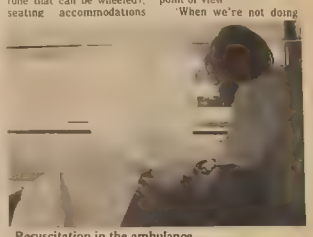
Right now, says Ogden the biggest problem the crew has is trying to figure out which streets are one-way and which is the best route around the reconstruction that is currently going on in the city

"The men themselves seem to be adapting rather well," he says. "Maybe because they've learned to work well as a team and take pride in what they're doing. If one man does something wrong the men think it reflects on the whole group"

The men themselves sometimes take a different point of view

"When we're not doing anything, one guy who hates another guy's guts may sit across the room from him and not say a word all shift long

As soon as something happens and they find themselves on the road together, it's a completely different story They become two men working together to form a highly efficient team



Resuscitation in the ambulance.

Ambulance is mobile emergency room, not a bus

The ambulance is still being thought of as a rapid transit system instead of a mobile emergency room says C.L. Brubacher

Brubacher, assistant director of the health ministry's emergency health services, says the 450-unit ambulance fleet in Ontario serves the largest jurisdiction in North America

It is estimated that the ministry fleet services approximately 75 million Ontario residents and visitors In 1972, he says, ambulances answered 450,000 requests and moved 405,000 people to and from hospitals

"We figure for every 10,000 people we get 1.45 ambulance calls per day," Brubacher says. "A fleet of only 450 ambulances doesn't sound like much, but we don't really need anymore. For one thing, the ministry couldn't afford them and for another, if we had one on every street corner, the men would become inefficient because they'd be answering one call every three months."

On the average, he says, one ambulance may get only two or three calls a day in an urbanized area, while some in remote areas receive less than 20 calls a year

Brubacher, who started as an ambulance man while attending university in 1957, says the major problem his division has is convincing people the ambulance is no longer just a form of rapid transit

"Doctors are being-trained to be very good in a particular environment, such as a hospital," he says. "Our men, on the other hand, are being taught basic lifesaving skills and they are equipped with basic life-support systems."

Brubacher says he is not trying to disparage doctors in any way, but most people should begin to realize that it is much easier to get a hold of an ambulance nowadays than a doctor because of better communications

"The ambulance service is geared to availability and looking after patients at the scene," he says. "We have a paramedical staff and specialized equipment. Our people work on the road under chaotic circumstances and are watched by anyone who wants to watch them. I double if doctors could work comfortably under that situation."

All Ontario ambulances are licensed, financed and under the direction of the ministry, he says, even though they may be under the supervision of a hospital administration, a private franchised operator volunteer operators, a municipality or a "fee-for-service" operator

This is the first year that vital statistics are being compiled by the ministry on ambulances, he says, and it really has no other statistics to compare with

Of the 405,000 people moved by ambulances, he says less than 700 people died in the ambulance. At the same time, he adds, more than 200 people were revived who were technically dead.

Many people think that the biggest number of calls ambulances answer are to car accidents, he says. But only 15 per cent are, he says, while the rest are usually house calls for acute illnesses

The ambulance service sometimes comes under severe attack from members of the public who witness ambulance teams waiting 30 or 60 seconds before they begin treating a patient, he says

"People get upset because our men look over a patient who is lying in a puddle of blood," he says "But bleeding is not the number one killer Clogged airways are the number one killer and it's not that easy for people to see That's why our men spend time looking over the patient first."

An ambulance team member receives extensive training, Brubacher says The ministry will only accept Grade 12 graduates with a valid senior first aid certificate

The man will receive in-service training first on all the lifting techniques and how to use the equipment plus some medical theory Then he is sent to Camp Borden for a 160-hour training course which teaches the more refined practical things like safe driving, rescue techniques and how to handle emotional victims as well as radio communications

"Our men have to be ready to support any disaster situation," he says "In most cases a disaster is always one more call than you have an ambulance for."

Robbie expects school to teach him how to hit the board

Robbie Moffatt (above) says he likes school "this much". Down below he says "a fella's got to practise if he wants to get anywhere." Robbie will start kindergarten in Lincoln Avenue Public School, Ajax, this September.

September 4 is a red letter day in the life of Robbie Moffatt

That is the day the Pickering five-year-old will begin his education starting with kindergarten at Lincoln Avenue Public School in Ajax

My teacher will be Mrs Jowitt" says Robbie enthusiastically The kids say she's nice and she gives out lollipops

Robbie is most interested in making things and has almost completed a go-cart from odd scraps of wood which sits proudly in his back yard

I would like to learn painting and how to hit the board when I'm hammering and how to make things he says, explaining "When I grow up I'd like to drive big machines what make big holes"

Perhaps the reason for Robbie's excitement is the fact that his older brother Mike who is eight has told him how much fun school is.

Robbie also visited Lincoln Avenue school last June where he and other freshmen viewed the facilities and met with the teacher

It was a neat school he recalls They got big wooden blocks and big pieces of square wood and pretend telephones and pretend horses The whole room is a really neat room and the room is really important They got a bell there It tells you it's recess time

During recess Robbie says he plans to master large bikes which have given him a bit of trouble in the past

I would like to learn to ride a bike that's too big for me and how I can sit on the seat and reach the pedals He says "I'm going to come home from school and teach Andrew" his four year old brother) how to ride big two-wheelers

He also plans to take part in school sports and says he would like to play hockey against Ajax

Although Robbie doesn't care too much for girls" because they are strong er he is already planning his school wardrobe so he'll look nice like a school boy

I like purple clothes and black ones he says

He had planned on driving his neat completed vehicle to school but is hesitant because he says When I put the motor in it will go about a thousand

I got a lock on my two wheeler Do you think I'm allowed to take that up there?"

Robbie realizes that school won't be all fun and that there will be demands.

I think I'll make mistakes when you have to count things and if you don't the teacher will teach you and it's hard work spelling

If you're bad," he says thoughtfully the teacher hides your head on the wall and then he get the principal

The principal hides your head around the wall too and get mad at you

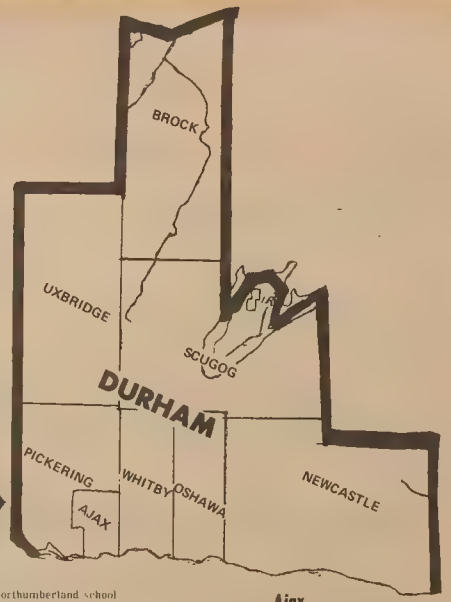
When do I go

A regional primer

What is the Durham Region all about?

EDITOR'S NOTE: Regional government for the Durham Region appears to be confusing a lot of people. Many of the citizens of the Durham Region are not sure what it will mean to them, whether they will lose their local councils or even how they are going to get a regional council.

In an effort to clear up some of the confusion, This Week has attempted to prepare a simple yet fairly comprehensive primer of how the citizens are expected to participate in the formation of the Durham Region.



The map outlines the boundaries of the new Regional Municipality of Durham to be established Jan. 1, 1974 as well as those of the area municipalities participating in the region.

The Region Municipality of Durham is a two tier municipal system that officially goes into effect Jan. 1, 1974.

Within the region there will be eight area or local councils and municipalities often combinations of existing municipalities. Each municipality will have a council of its own. The mayor and one or more of the councillors — called regional councillors — will sit on both the local and regional councils. The local councilor will sit only on the local council.

Elections have been called for Oct. 1 to elect both regional and local representatives for all municipalities taking part in the Durham Region. A ghost regional council will meet around October 15 to begin organization of the regional administration.

The province has already appointed East Whitby farmer Walter Heath as the region's first chairman. His position is comparable to that of Paul Godfrey in Metro Toronto. The chairman is not allowed to vote except to break a tie.

The local municipalities will be responsible for certain very local duties: tax collection, local roads, sidewalks, garbage collection, fire protection, local planning, local parks.

The regional council will be responsible for the total planning of the region, all sewer and water services for the region, roads which are designated regional roads, garbage disposal, welfare benefits, debenturing for the region and local municipalities — and so on. Health, the Children's Aid Society and Police protection will also be administered at the regional level.

This means that the public will have to take certain of its problems up with local councillors who sit only on the council of the municipality, while contacting regional councillors with other problems of a regional nature.

Preparation for an election Oct. 1 to elect representatives for a three year term is already underway.

Enumeration was conducted in June and voters lists in each municipality were posted Monday, Aug. 20. But there are still a number of opportunities for people who missed being accounted for during the enumeration to have their names inserted on the voters' list or to have incorrect information corrected.

The procedure begins with revising boards held in the office of the clerk of each municipality starting yesterday, Aug. 21 and running through Aug. 28. If a person misses that opportunity, he can still go to the clerk of the municipality in which he resides or owns property, to be added to the voters' list upon presentation of proper proof. This opportunity is open right up until September 28.

After that a person wishing to vote may do so by presenting himself at the appropriate polling station and making a declaration of eligibility before the deputy returning officer. If the DRO is convinced the person is eligible to vote, he will allow him to do so.

To qualify to vote in municipal elections and elections to school boards a person must be 18 years of age or over, A British subject or Canadian citizen and a resident of his local municipality, if the owner or tenant of property in a local municipality or the spouse of an owner or tenant, during the period of June 18 to July 14, 1973.

The Oct. 1 elections will also call for votes on representatives to both the Durham Region Board of Education and the Durham Region Separate School Board. Only residents of the new town of Newcastle will not vote for school board members — since they will continue under the jurisdiction of the Northumberland school system.

Although the name 'the Durham Region' has been used in every reference to regional government since June, the name is not finalized and it can be changed. Combined with the election of councillors is a plebiscite to determine the name from a choice - Durham, McLaughlin, Pickering and Oshawa. Each voter will be asked to select his favorite name when casting his ballots Oct. 1.

Nominations for all council and school board positions will be by filing a nomination for with the clerk of the appropriate municipality between 9 a.m. Friday, September 7 and 5 p.m. Monday, September 10. Nominations for all council and school board positions will be by filing a nomination for with.

Nominations for all council and school board positions will be by filing a nomination with the clerk of the appropriate municipality between 9 a.m. Friday, September 7 and 5 p.m. Monday, September 10. Nomination forms are already available at some municipal clerks' offices.

Oshawa

The city of Oshawa will be combined with the Township of East Whitby when regional government is introduced Jan. 1, 1974. The new municipality will keep the name of Oshawa.

The new Oshawa Council will consist of a mayor to be elected by all of the people from East Whitby and Oshawa, nine regional councillors to be elected by the people of the old city of Oshawa, one regional councillor to be elected by the people of East Whitby, three local councillors to be elected by the people of old Oshawa, one local councillor to be elected by the people of East Whitby.

Nomination papers are available at the clerk's office at the city hall in Oshawa or at the East Whitby Township Offices in Columbus.

The revising board will convene until next Tuesday at the Oshawa council chambers, but further revisions may be made at either the Oshawa clerk's office or the township office.

Oshawa-East Whitby voters will also elect their school representatives at this time. Public school supporters in the combined municipality will elect seven members to the new Durham Board of Education. Separate school supporters will elect one member to the board of education and nine members to the Durham Separate School Board.

Whitby

There is to be no change in the external boundaries of Whitby and the existing four wards will remain intact. The name will remain Whitby.

Whitby voters will all vote for a mayor and for two regional councillors. One local councillor will be elected from each ward to make up a council of seven.

Whitby public school supporters will cast ballots to elect two members to the Durham Region Board of Education. Separate school supporters in Whitby will vote for one separate school representative on the board of education who will represent all separate school supporters in the region except for those in Oshawa and the new town of Newcastle. Whitby and the new area municipalities of Brock (Beaverton, Cannington and the townships of Brock and Thorah) and Scugog (Scugog, Reach and Cartwright Townships and Port Perry) will send two members to the Durham Separate School Board.

Ajax

The new town of Ajax will be comprised of the old Town of Ajax, the old Village of Pickering and a part of Pickering Township south of the Fourth Concession Road and roughly east of the Brock Road and west of the Whitby-Pickering townline.

The new town is divided into five wards, each of which will elect one local councillor to the seven-member council. All voters will cast ballots to elect the mayor and the one regional councillor.

Two members of the Durham Region Board of Education will be elected from Ajax, one from wards one two and three and one from wards four and five. Separate school supporters in Ajax will elect one member to the Durham Separate School Board and will vote for the single separate school representative on the board of education for all of the local municipalities in the region except Oshawa and Newcastle.

Ward one is basically the former village plus some of the township area around it. Ward two is the rest of new Ajax north of Highway 401.

Ward three runs east and west between Highway 401 and Baseline. Wards four and five being the residential area closest to the lake including Pickering Beach. For precise details contact Ajax town hall.

Pickering

The new town of Pickering consists of all of the old township except for the West Rouge area that goes to Scarborough and the portion that is annexed to Ajax. All.

All voters in Pickering will cast ballots for the Mayor.

The town is divided into three wards - the rural ward roughly north of the third Concession Road, and two urban wards divided north and south by White's Road continued south of Highway 401 to the east side of Frenchman's Bay.

Each ward will elect one local and one regional councillor to the town council. Each ward will also elect one member to the Durham Region Board of Education.

Pickering and Uxbridge separate school supporters will combine their ballots to elect two members to the Durham Separate School Board. They will also vote for the one separate school representative to represent all of the municipalities but Oshawa and Newcastle on the public board.

Newcastle

The New Town of Newcastle will combine the townships of Darlington and Clarke, the Village of Newcastle and the Town of Bowmanville, all now part of Durham County.

Three wards have established in this new town - Bowmanville is one, Darlington another and the combined area of Clarke and Newcastle the third.

The new town of Newcastle will have a seven-member council consisting of the mayor to be elected by all voters, three regional councillors - one from each ward, and three local councillors — also one from each ward.

Since Newcastle will remain within the jurisdiction of the Durham Northumberland school boards - to be renamed the Northumberland schools boards - there will be no school board elections in this area until December 1974.

Just what will those rate hikes mean to you?

by garnet cowsill

Insurance rates in the Durham Region are up as of Aug 1, and here's how it looks

John Aker treasurer of Schofield-Aker Limited, has provided a dozen examples of insurance rate increases proposed by the Canadian Underwriters' Association for drivers in different brackets and different cars that were selected by This Week

They are based on a one year policy and it will give you the basic idea how the rate increases will affect you. If you want to compute your insurance costs using these figures for a six-month policy, just add four per cent onto the total and divide the number in half

If you are a 16-year old male and are insuring a 1965 Volkswagen with $100,000 liability and comprehensive, but no collision you will pay $58 less than you would have last year This year, a one-year policy will cost you $427 whereas it would have cost $485 last year

If you are an 18-year-old male insuring a 1967 Camaro with liability and comprehensive, you will pay $42 less than last year This year it will cost you $328 as opposed to $370 last year

If you are a 22-year-old married male insuring a 1973 Chevelle with liability, collision and comprehensive, it will cost $33 more than last year You will pay $226 if you have been driving for five years, accident-free and without a moving traffic violation Last year, under the same conditions, you would have paid only $193

If you are a single -22-year-old male insuring the same Chevlle for the same things, your rates will increase by $29 to $340 from $311

Insurance rates tend to stablize for a male when he is either twenty-five and married, or thirty and single

A 25-year-old married man would pay $28 more this year to insure that Chevelle, and his policy would cost $164 as opposed to $136 last year

The 25-year-old single man, however would pay $272 this year to insure the Chevelle up by $50 from last year

Now, if you're a 25-year-old married man who can't afford a new car and, say, you have a 1968 station wagon and you want collision, liability, and comprehensive, your rates will increase by only $8 to $149 from $141

The bigger and more expensive car, the more you pay for insurance

A 40-year old married man with a 1973 Catalina would pay $177 The increase is $21 more than the $156 he would have paid last year

However, if you are a married man the same age as the Catalina owner but you drive a moderately-priced car, say a 1973 six-cylinder Nova, you pay only $154 Your rate is up $27 over last year's $127

Women drivers are a completely different kettle of fish as far as insurance rates go. Many people believe women, in general, are better drivers than men. Not so, says Aker

'Women are better insurance risks simply because they don't drive as often as men, their mileage is lower and therefore they have fewer accidents than men," he says

Insurance rates for women are lower for just that reason

If you are an 18-year-old woman who has just received a 1973 Volkswagen for your birthday, your insurance costs will be considerably lower than those of a male the same age

Last year you would have paid $54. This year you pay $3 less

If you are a 22-year-old single woman, insuring the same car you will pay $186 this year, $4 more than you would have paid last year

But, say you are married and your husband is fortunate enough to be able to buy a second car, a 1971 Vega, for you to drive on your 25th birthday Because it is a second car, insurance companies know it won't be driven that much so they give you a 10 per cent policy discount

Unfortunately, it will cost you $16 more to insure it this year than it did for someone to insure the same car last year To insure that Vega will cost you $114 as opposed to $98 last year

Another factor that will influence your insurance rate will be the number of years you have been driving without an accident or a traffic violation, say a speeding ticket

Aker says many insurance firms are currently offering what is known as a five-star insurance policy if you can qualify The object of the policy is no insurance rate hikes if you are involved in an accident that is your fault

The reason for the policy is that after a person had an accident and knew their rates would be going up, they would cancel their insurance and go to other firms looking for better or more competitive rates," says Aker "Most insurance agencies were experiencing a 20 per cent float of clients because of accident rate increase, and that didn't help anyone.'

Now, to qualify under the five-star plan, you have to be driving for five years accident free, and you cannot have more than two moving traffic violations in the past three years

"The benefit of the plan is a slight reduction in rate and you are not penalized, so to speak, for having an accident," Aker says. "The client's driving record earns hims the qualification and about 75 per cent of the public can qualify '

Up go the insurance rates . . . . . .

MEMO FROM HELEN GAGEN

Consumer Advisor
for Miracle Food Mart
75 Resdale Blvd.
Rexdale Ont. M9W 1P2

ARE YOU USING UNIT VALUE PRICING?

Women have asked for it—now you have it on about 3,000 items at Miracle Food Mart

On shelves under such things as canned foods, detergents, bleaches, jams and cereals are easy to-read labels giving price per pint, quart, fluid ounce ounce or pound

By checking the unit price of one brand against another, or different sizes of the same brand, you can find which is the least expensive per pint quart ounce etc

For instance you may find that one brand of baked beans costs 1.2 cents per fluid ounce compared to 1.7 cents for the same size of another brand Or you can tell immediately if a large-sized package of cereal costs less per serving than the smaller size of the same cereal

Unit value pricing doesn't compare quality or flavour But it does show you which brand or size is less expensive

These days of rising food costs, it pays to take a few minutes to study unit value pricing, then try products which cost less per unit You may decide to return to your previous brand, but you have given yourself the chance to consider the possibilities of saving

This Week 5, City Hall 4

Votegetter just can't beat paperhanger

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

City councillors should have stuck to making bylaws.

Last week, you remember, the City Hall Selects, featuring Jim Potticary and his gang, took on the staff of This Week Stuperstars in a benefit softball game in the aid of muscular dystrophy.

Needless to say, we whipped those guys with ease, and without any practice.

Sure, we had some inside tricks, but despite those nasty rumors from the aldermen that the game ended in a 4-4 tie, our scorekeeper informs us that without a doubt, the final score was 5-4 in favour of This Week.

Potticary and his group had at least three workouts in preparation for this important match to try to save face after last winter's 3-2 hockey licking at the "Aud".

One thing about it was that it was a lot of fun, especially seeing Ruth Bestwick being helped home after receiving nine strikes from head umpire Danny Logeman.

Ruth, a real fancy dan on the base paths, was helped across home plate by umpire Logeman and yours truly.

Needless to say our pitcher, Mel Meulemeester, who was called away from holidays to pitch for us, was This Week's hero. Mel hasn't pitched in more than 12 years, but showed a lot of his old form and even pulled off a double steal with our Pat Pappas.

His counterpart at the mound, Normie Bagnell, an ex-team-mate of Mel's even tried to pitch a grapefruit by Mel, but all remains of it were lost flying over centre field and that's where we really won the game.

As in the hockey game, we jumped out in front 2-zip in the second inning, only to have our coach, Tom Douglas, tell us to ease up and let the City Hallers at least get on the score sheet. As good sports, we did.

I've got to talk to Bagnell myself about his pitching. He took the opportunity to hit me in the overhand and I had to be relived by speedy John Bell on the base paths.

One thing about the umpires, they were on our side. Mr. Softball himself, John Brady, Fire Chief Ernie Stacey, and Tony's Logeman and Phil Solomon, for some reason really enjoyed a drink from This Week's water pail. This, of course, is part of our strategy against the City Hall club.

Alderman George Drynan after receiving a guest walk got literally all tied up at first base. Even Alderman Bruce McArthur's try to break the tie in the final inning was abruptly halted with a mammoth tackling display at home plate.

It was such a magnificent display of athletic prowess on our part that the City Hallers have had problems since our victory trying to figure out what sport they would like to challenge us to next.

One thing for sure, the fans enjoyed the entire game even though Con. John McLaughlin didn't. The umpire gave him the heave-ho for spilling his drink.

Some fans insisted that our club cheated, but according to the scoreboard we had no errors. Perhaps maybe a misprint or two and that's what counts. The final score again - THIS WEEK 5 and CITY HALL 4.

There it is in black and white as proof, and I'm filing it for future reference in case the City Hall boys try to wangle their way out of their defeat next time they challenge us.

Danny Logeman, umpire, Catcher Jim Shaw and Alderman George Drynan show the top form they were in for the City Council vs. This Week ball game to raise money for muscular dystrophy. Shaw has it that his team won by one point. George has it that his team won by two, and the umpire is afraid both of bad publicity and higher taxes. . . . . .

Dry run for Oshawa Gens

Oshawa Generals, who open up training camp in 15 days, will be having a "dry run" to get in shape for the 1973-74 Ontario Hockey Association Junior "A" series.

Last Monday trainer Wayne Daniels started indoor workouts at the "Aud" for the local players who will be attending the training camp.

Each night at 6 p.m. the Gens' prospects are going through workouts to ensure they will arrive at training camp in the best possible shape.

"It's a good way," says manager-coach Gus Bodnar," and I'm proud that Wayne, our head training man, came up with the idea."

McHugh gets Hawkeyes going after three 3

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

It took until the fourth game of the season for the Oshawa Hawkeyes to discover a quarterback and record a victory in the Ontario Junior Football Conference

After three straight setbacks Hawkeyes went and stuck with one signal caller Jimmy McHugh as he guided the club to a thrilling 22 13 victory over the Oakville Colts

This was the same Colt team who had dumped Oshawa in the season-opener a month ago

McHugh from McLaughlin Collegiate showed poise and confidence in directing the club to the victory, something which was lacking in the first three games

Hawkeyes have tried various QB's without success but seem to have finally found a replacement for Terry Clements who was the team's top pivot last season

The victory keeps Oshawa in the play-off hunt and Friday night the Peterborough Jets come to town for a game at Civic Fields

This is a different team than fans had witnessed in the home opener At present, the club has a lot of confidence and spirit and could become a consistent winner

Should the Hawkeyes lose against Peterborough you might as well consider the season as being over as far as post-season play is concerned

Hawkeyes have a lot of catching up to do but freshman mentor Bill McTeer has confidence in his players expecially after the victory

McHugh direct the first TD after Dough Crough accepted a long pass and thus allowed Jim Berry to score easily

In the first half Pete O Brein with some headup-defensive work grabbed off a pass from Oakville QB Randy Shere mata and raced some 107 yards for Oshawa's major score

The Hawkeyes defensive has been taking a lot of criticism from the fans in the first three games, however, like the offensive they seem to have come of age

Dave Crough again teamed up with McHugh, hitting a TD pass for another six points

McHugh also handled the punting and was superb in this department as well

Whitby Tykes only club

For a lot of young Whitby ballplayers it's going to be a long winter as four out of Whitby's five baseball clubs in Eastern Ontario Baseball Association play have been knocked out of contention in the early rounds

The K of C Tykes, who have been Whitby's most consistent winner over the years remain as the only club still battling it out for 73 diamond honors hooked up with Cobourg, having won the opener of the best of three finals for the E.O.B.A Tyke A title 24-0

The game was strictly "no contest" as the K of C club completely dominated the play, scoring three runs in the first, six in the second and a whopping nine runs in the third for an 18-0 lead at the half-way point

Mike Welling and Ricky Dunphy shared the pitching chores for the Whitby club with Welling, who started and hurled the first five innings, the winner

John Wall led the hitting parade with a pair of singles and a double Joe Doucet and Grant Leitch matched efforts with a double and single each Dennis Fulton had a double, Murray McCorkell a triple, Mike Welling a double and Mark Underwood, Kevin Jimmo and Rick Dunphy singles.

Cobourg had three hits and failed to push a run across as the K of C's came up with some fine defensive plays

Canadian Tire out

The Canadian Tire Midgets bowed out of the 73 season, dropping the finals for E.O.B.A. Midget "A" honors two straight, 9-3 and 6-2

In the series opener played at Donegan Park in Cobourg, the Whitby club was held to three runs, all in the third inning while Cobourg got on the board with a pair in the first and second, single runs in the third and fourth and three in the fifth

Armand Robitaille came through with a pair of doubles, Mike Rowley a pair of singles, Terry Harper a triple, John Turner a double and Dave Parish a single In the second game of the set, played at E A Fairman Saturday the Canadian Tire club was knocked out of contention, losing 6-2

Paul Bevan on the mound for Cobourg was the stumbling block again as he held Whitby to four hits, a double and a single by John Turner, and singles to Steve Sarginson and Armand Robitaille

The game saw only three errors as both clubs came up with some fine defensive plays

The Canadian Tire club followed the Lasco Steelers in being eliminated by Cobourg. The long standing rivalry between the two towns may be at an end however, as Whitby's population increase will put Whitby in a higher classification in the future The two towns still engage in seasonal play, but go separate ways in playoffs

Reds out at home

The season came to an end for the Whitby Reds in Junior competition when the Keene Expos spoiled their bid to take E O B A Junior A honors by edging the Reds in two tight games 3-2 and 3-1

In the series' opener, played at E.A. Fairman park, the Reds were out in front 2-0 at the end of the seven innings, but lost their lead. They fought back but the final out of the game was made at home plate and would have pulled the Reds back into a tie

Dave Ross was on the mound for the Reds and came up with a standout pitching chore, holding Keene to five hits

The Reds outhit the visitors 9-5 and committed two errors to four for the Expos but the Keene club was on top in the run column where it counts

The second game of the best of three set was played in Keene and turned out to be another close one with the Reds losing 3-1 and bowing out of further play for 1973

Harold Moore got the pitching assignment for the deciding game and responded with a fine effort, but Keene were not to be denied and came out winners

In the opening game Dave Ross, with three singles, and Harold Moore, with a pair of safeties, were the leaders for the Reds at the plate, while in the second Harry Long led the way with a pair of singles

Long's play in the second game was surprising because he was knocked out of action in the game the day before, taken to hospital for observation by ambulance, and shook off his bruises to play the crucial game in Keene

Benefit soccer dance

Saturday night members of the Oshawa City Council and Whitby Town Council will be on the dance floor rather than in the committee rooms in the aid of soccer in the two municipalities

Earlier in the year, the councils in both municipalities played an exhibition soccer game which proved to be successful

Hubert Adebar, publicity chairman for minor soccer in Whitby has nicknamed the dame the Pussballers Tanz

It should be a gala old night

Oshawa needs junior softball club

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

A few years ago softball at the minor level was at a low ebb in the city

Sure, the City & District league was winning provincial championships at a rapid clip but it seemed that everybody forgot about where all the talent developed

This year is a perfect example as Oshawa has no Junior softball club and lets face it for senior and intermediate teams to survive, minor talent must be developed to produce a continuing supply of new talent

Bruce McArthur the president of the Oshawa Minor Softball Association realized this and four years ago took over the president's chair in an attempt to rebuild minor ball in the city

Sure lacrosse soccer and tennis have stolen some talent away as the sports became more popular each summer but the fact still remains that softball was dying at a minor level

After all Oshawa was and still is recognized as the softball capital of Canada, but the championships couldn't go on forever

First of all the newly-formed association ran a weekly bingo each Thursday night during the entire year to help get the proper financial backing it required in the rebuilding project Gerry Brooks Tony's successful general manager took over the position of commissioner with Chuck Mehring Don Tandy and Dean Henley coming on as directors

This was the start as McArthur felt a standout executive would eventually make a strong organization on the field

Besides helping minor boys softball the Bingo has helped out with two girls teams donated trophies help sponsor a team in the Simcoe Hall Basketball league and have made healthy donations to Meals on Wheels, community chest various youth organizations and other community groups

At present the Oshawa Softball Association is the main sponsor behind an attempt to secure the Canadian Softball Championships in 1974 at Civic Fields

We did realize that eventually a junior softball club would fold said McArthur, "however in the next couple of seasons we feel that we will be back where we once were as an organization in the 50s and 60s

Oshawa has teams competing in the Ontario Amateur Softball Association in the squirt division peewee bantam midget and juvenile brackets and hope next year to take over a junior franchise for the city

Coaches like Bill Davies Lionel Baker Gord Bell Ossie Keeler Rink Bowler Andy McMullen, Tommy O'Connor and George Lintlup have done an outstanding job with the All star teams

It takes a long time to rebuild an organization but the Oshawa Minor is starting to see result for example the juvenile club have an excellent chance to become a provincial winner

Defensive stalwart Perry Adebar scores first goal in six years

Seldom do defensive players receive recognition for their abilities

The publicity it seems is received by the offensive stars

Each week it's the same old players who receive all the ink from the papers. Last week for example an almost unknown Perry Adebar a stalwart defensive star scored his first goal in six years and it was the winner as Local 222 bested Brooklin 5-4

Adebar has been a standout defensively but very seldom was recognized by the press The win enabled Local 222 to retain first place with a 10-win one-tie one-defeat record Rick Prinzen scored two other goals

Tasco Steelers recorded a pair of lopsided 11-0 wins over Armstrong Homes who are still winless

Don Couture tallied six goals with Mark Smith and Bill Dugan having five goals apiece. Chris Catering had four goals from Rick Borg while Dave Gunn and Dave Wilcox gathered three each for an 11-3 victory over Harilaid Stars

Squirt Play

Paul Hoogkamp blasted three goals with Rod Collins and Dave Craig collecting two apiece as first place Koke Car Wash splashed Wilson Sports 7-2 Randall Plumbers, remaining one point back of top spot nipped White Insurance 2-1

Atoms Action

Unbeaten Kinsmen battled Whitby Welding to a 2-2 draw with Robbie Van Essen and Chris Hunter scoring for Kinsmen

Chris Johnston and Brian Strong replied for Whitby Welding

Paul Vanderkoff and Frank Princiotta scored two goals apiece as Wonico picked on winless Ex-Cel Plumbers 5-2

King West Garden Centre rolled over Rae Jones Realtors, 7-zip. Peter Beaudry scored three goals and Scott Lintner two

MacDonalds Whitby Mall shaded Country Style Do Nuts 3-1 on goals by Scott Williams. Mike Farrell and Gerry Winkel

Mosquitoes Results

Mercantile Stores had a successful week beating Gerry's Produce 4-3 and Croxall 6-5 Mark Shield lead the two-game, one-goal decisions with five markers Earl Hand had two

Kiwanis also posted wins over Munns Press, 10-5, and Lions, 4-0. It was a three-man show as Keith Wilson poppped in seven goals, Jim Reid five and Calvin Camplin a single

Art Vanslageren and Bob Lynde had two each for Munns

Gerry s Produce nipped Munns Press 3-1 and Lions battled Longmuir Builders to a 1-1 draw

Meet Jim Rowden of Oshawa Tony's

For years now the Oshawa Tony's have always had the best third baseman patrolling the "hat corner for them in Senior "A" softball

Sammy Stark, Tommy O'Connor and Rich March have all held the position over the last 20 years and they've just been super ball players

March was the last one to hold down regular employment, but since his sudden retirement manager Ron Wright has literally searched for a replacement. It seems after a couple years of looking, he's gotten what he went after in Jimmy Rowden

Rowden is no stranger to the local softball buffs having played all his softball in Oshawa

A graduate from the sandlots of Sunnyside Park, Rowden used to be an outfielder but decided to get out of softball for five years (1956 to 1961) because his parents used to tour the States in the summer months

Finally, a neighborhood friend and former teammate, Ralph Davis, talked him into coming out and giving softball a try again. He did, and the fans are glad he did

"I missed a lot of schooling in the game and it took a few years to catch up to the other fellows," says the handsome 30-year-old

Rowden toiled in Juvenile and helped Genosha Aces capture a Juvenile crown in 1963. He played Junior with Scugog Cleaners and then was one of the key members of the famed Gale Lumber teams and was a member of that team when they established a O.A.S.A record by winning five consecutive Senior "B" titles

Playing for Gale Lumber in the 60s was just super, recalls Rowden, but on and off the field "I owe a lot to the Carnwith brothers, both the team s sponsors, for keeping the club to gether

When the Gale Lumber squad decided to fold Rowden considered that his softball career had ended and decided to hang up his spikes once and for all claiming that softball was finished when the Gale Lumber team disbanded.

"I missed the entire spring training, but finally after talking with Gerry Brooks, he convinced me to come out and play again," he says. "Actually, it didn't take too much because once the season had started I realized that I had made a mistake and softball was in my blood

Last year was a poor season for Rowden as he was hampered with injuries and saw limited action

Regarded as a solid defensive ball player, Rowden can also hit with authority. On occasions his shoulder still bothers him and hampers the six-footer from hitting the long ball like he used to

"I guess now I try only to meet the ball and go for singles and the odd double," claims Rowden "Before with Gale Lumber I used to be a free swinger with the bat"

On occasion he will still let loose Recently, at the Richmond Hill Centennial tournament, Rowden did, and blasted out two home runs in the final game to be the batting hero as Tony's took the title

"Pitching in the Ontario Fastball circuit is just great, and if you manage a hit a game, you're lucky, admits Rowden "On this club, with the type of pitching we have, I just try to advance the runner along and we have won the majority of our games by 2-1, 1-0 or 3-2 scores"

He says Tony's have an excellent chance of winning the O.F.L. title despite key injuries to shortstop Darryl Hudgins and second sacker Davey Stewart

This is just a solid ball club with outstanding pitching, and there is no reason why we can't go all the way

Rowden is a real team leader, and with his experience, he's one of the reasons Tony s are the most successful Senior "A" club in Ontario this summer

Second This Week Expo trip scheduled

Baseball! Baseball! That's right, our Sports Department is all set for our second Montreal Expos - This Week baseball trip scheduled for Jarry Park - Saturday, Sept. 22 and 23

Pittsburgh Pirates and Montreal Expo s will be battling in two afternoon games beginning at 2:15 p.m. each day

Again, this will allow our fans to be able to visit and enjoy gay old downtown Montreal again

Judging from the number of fans who called the office last week, it won't take long before the bus - or two this time - will be full

The price for the trip, which includes bus fare, hotel room and box tickets to the ball games, is $39

The bus will be leaving Ajax at 6 45 a m and Oshawa at 7 a.m. for Montreal on September 22 and we should arrive in Montreal at about 12:30 noon and be able to watch both teams workout with infield practice

After the game we will book into the hotel allowing the fans to freshen up and be able to make the trip to downtown Montreal where we will be visiting the Old Munich Beer Gardens which have always been a popular spot, and the highlight of earlier trips to Quebec

At 1 a.m the bus will return you to the hotel and the following day Sunday we will check out of the hotel at 12 00 noon for the ball park

Immediately following the game we will board the bus for home and it should arrive back in Oshawa about 10 30 p.m

As in the past, couples are encouraged to go on the trip, and if enough should turn out, we may have an interesting side trip for the gals to one of Montreal's famour shopping centres

It should be fun, so why not join us again Tickets will be sold on a first-come-first-serve basis

All cheques should be made out to This Week - Montreal Expo Baseball Trip. Our office is located at 390 King St. W. in Oshawa. For any further details, contact Jim Shaw, sports editor, at 576-6450

Chief scout hired

Joe Wilks, president of the Pickering Panthers of the Ontario Metro Junior "B" Hockey league, is predicting a provincial title for his club in its second year of operation

Wilks announced this morning that Jack Watson has been hired as chief scout for the Cats

"We feel that we are on the righh track and it's believed that the Cats are the only junior "B" club who have a full time scout," he says

Watson brings to the Panthers a lot of experience in the scouting field having been a bird dog for the Peterborough TPT Petes and St Catharines Black Hawks during the past 10 years

Says Rev J. A. Robb

Children of God group is a menace to society

by rev. john a. robb

So the "Children of God have sent two of their missionaries to Oshawa for a two week period!

Christianity Today in the July 20, 1973 edition carries a well-documented article the "Deceptions of the Children of God" by Ericson and MacPherson, from which I draw some of the following observations –

Members of the group stated on a national telecast, "that they were so loyal to Moses (their leader) and so obedient that even if he told them to kill their parents, they would do so!"

One ex-COG testified on NBC's "Chronology Program in the summer of 1972:- "I was taught in the Children of God I would have to commit adultery, theft and murder during the last seven years of the world because of the fact that we would be under cover and there would be things like this that would have to be done in order to sustain our group."

In Belleville, Ontario a little over a year ago, the police had to be called because several teens disappeared, apparently under a certain amount of hypnosis and, when they were ultimately returned, they seemed to have been psychologically impaired

The Children of God have had some success in their efforts to recruit from the other Jesus-People groups, whom they consider compromisers

Parents who find out where their children are located and come to talk with them are often prevented from doing so.

An English newspaper "Sunday People" set up an experiment to see if COG dealt honestly with parents A young reporter "joined" COG. The next day an older reporter posing as his father, came seeking him. The elders denied that his "son" was there and denied even knowing him. While the "father" was being offered coffee, Bible verses and a demonstration of love, the elders tried to get the young reporter to let them hide him (Sunday People, Sept. 24, 1972).

One must understand the COG view of the older generation, as a whole, in order to understand this behavior. Adults are assumed to belong to the "system which manifests itself more in government, jobs, schools and (most evil of all) churches - all of which make up the Great Whore of Babylon!'

In summary, therefore, this absolutely false movement is riding around on the coat-tails of the Jesus People Movement (which in turn is legitimate and good)

If anyone wants to be a scoundrel that is his privilege but if he tries to be one under the guise of religion, I shall denounce him with every ounce of my Irish energy!!

We would be failing very badly if we did not issue this warning especially to parents in our community

MUSIC GRAD

Eugene Laszkiewicz, 23, of 445 Arnhem Drive in Oshawa, has graduated from Queen's University in Kingston with a bachelor of music degree He is the first musician in Canada to graduate with a major in accordian

Laszkiewicz will represent Canada next month in an international accordian competition – Le Coup Mondial - in Vichy, France

He plans to go on for his masters degree at the University of Toronto this fall and teach accordian theory and harmony in Oshawa. He is the son of Bill and Anna Laszkiewicz.

Copy deadline for this week in Religion, 5 p.m. monday, prior to publication. Rates for Church Notices and special events may be obtained by calling Mrs. Pappas 576-9372. Mailing address This week in Religion, Box 481, Oshawa. Office address:390 King W. Oshawa.

RELIGION

THE MYSTERY #6

The salvation of Eph 2 8-10 is the salvation we read about in Ac 28 28, Be it known therefore unto you, that the salvation of God is sent unto the Gentiles, and that they will hear it. Salvation up to this time had been of the Jews, as we learn in John 4, 21,22; Woman, believe Me, the hour cometh, when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father Ye worship ye know not what we know what we worship for salvation is of the Jews

The Jew had the priority in the matter of salvation up till the end of Acts. Salvation had to do with a calling, an adoption, and blessing. This was not everlasting life The Jew had no monopoly on that in any way whatsoever. Everlasting life is not dispensational, but true of all times. Everlasting life was no part of the mystery. It was made known in De 8 3 so that all Israel could know about it

There is a very close relationship between the Head and the body. So if He be seated in the heavenlies, then the body is also seated there with Him. He is not now manifest there Principalities and powers, and mights and dominions do not see Him. If anyone today should go to heaven, he would not see Christ But a glorious day is coming when He will be manifested there and His body with Him (Col 3 1-4)

This is the hope of the church, but was never the hope of Israel They will see Him when He comes to the earth to take up His kingdom over the kingdoms of the earth. But when He comes, He will have many crowns Where does He get them?

Now we are plainly told in 2Ti 2 11, 12 that if we have died with Him, we shall live with Him; that if we suffer or endure, then we shall reign with Him; but if we deny Him our service and faith, He will deny us the prize or reward Fair enough; in fact, this is most gracious It is a gift from God for members of the body to suffer for Him (Ph'p 1 29)

A growth of the body of Chnst is expected, the normal thing First, it grows as an habitation of God (Eph 2:21). Then, it is fitly jointed together, all the parts working in such harmony that it increases and is edifying itself in love (Eph 4 16) This is repeated in Col 2 19

We have already noted that it is a temple (Eph 2:21), and it is for an habitation of God in Spirit. He will dwell in His people, the body of Chnst!

Last month we had an article on Ton Hagion That should be read at this point It tells us that God has a great inheritance in the Holiest of all, that Gentiles have been made, fellowcitizens of the Holy of Holies, and finally that God has made us meet to partake of that inheritance in the Holiest of all which is in the Shekinah glory These are certainly riches untold and which are hard for us even to imagine And this great good news was never told until after Ac 28 28 It was kept a secret. There was a reason but that will come later

Since the saints are to dwell in the Holiest of all (look at Eph 1 18; 2 19, Col 1 12), we find that they are to walk as children of light, that Shekinah light associated with the Holiest of all (Eph 5 8)

Posture-Mate. A firm supporter of a good night's sleep

99.98 39"-single size

48/54"-double size 119.98

Don't greet each day with a yawn! Discover that 'great-to-be-alive' feeling that only a good sleep. . .on a good mattress. . . can bring. Our Posture-Mate Royale gets your every day off to a beautiful beginning by offering you that extra support where you need it most. In the center 3rd zone of both the mattress and foundation, where your weight is greatest. Proper insulation is important too. So we've put sisal pads and deep layers of white felt over the coils. Then added a cloud-soft layer of Serofoam. We've topped all this comfort with our best quality, (luxuriously soft) rayon cover. And Sani Garded it for lasting freshness. Posture Mate. It's beautiful difference between a yawn and a smile!

Store hour debate

NEVER ON SUNDAY?

this week

Vol 4 No. 35 — 15 CENTS ON YOUR NEWS STAND — Wednesday August 29, 1973

and what about the holidays?

"Sundays, holy days and statutory holidays should not be reason for another Spectacular Sales Event. Such days should provide occasions when families can have the opportunity to be together."

And the above is not a quote from a sermon.

Whether you agree or don't agree with the statement, we're sure you'll be surprised to find it's a quote from a statement by the manager of one of the area's major retail stores, Simpsons-Sears.

Elsewhere in this issue H.R. Borden, the Simpsons-Sears manager makes a plea for legislation to restore a measure of sanity to the jungle of store hours in effect in this area.

Education Minister Tom Wells

Wells on education

School boards should have their powers widely expanded to include responsibility for all services to people, education minister Tom Wells told This Week reporter Linda Sutton in an exclusive interview.

School boards are already made up of people responsive to the needs of people, Wells said, suggesting that responsibility for such services be taken away from municipal councils and given to the school boards. This would allow a more rational provision of all soft services, said the education minister, and given proper emphasis to people programs.

Wells also talks about the provincial ceilings on education spending discipline in the open concept school, the credit system and education in the Durham Region.

Official gobbledegook

"While words of learned length and thundering sound,
Amazed the gazing rustics ranged around;
And still they gazed and still the wonder grew...."
- From The Deserted Village by Oliver Goldsmith, 1730-1774

● ● ● ● ●

The above lines came to mind while we made a valiant attempt to wrestle our way through the proposed Official Plan of the City of Oshawa

A week from tonight there will be a final hearing for public input. Then the Official Plan will very likely be on its way to becoming just that..

What of it?

If you're a property owner in the City of Oshawa, and you haven't yet spent an evening with this piece of gobbledegook from the city's planning staff, you'd better do so within the next few days

The way in which the plan has thus far been presented is a perfect example of how not to. The public - at least those who have taken an interest - have seen poor planning, bad public relations and crass bureaucratic arrogance, along with an inability of the planning staff to explain clearly and concisely the text of the plan

On balance it looks to us as if a new plan - our present one is 20 years old - is being foisted on us with too much haste

LIKE WATERGATE

The wording of the new Official Plan brings to mind the Watergate hearings. As Time Magazine put it on Aug. 13, the U.S. administration's unwritten laws of language are:

1. Never use a word when a sentence will do;
2. Obscure, don't clarify;
3. Humpty Dumpty was right when he said to Alice "when I use a word, it means exactly what I choose it to mean; no more, no less."

In the Watergate hearings criminality was given scores of numbing disguises.

George Orwell spoke for all time "If thought corrupts language, language can also corrupt thought." Yet, even with his innate pessimism, Orwell offered a solution - a method more applicable today than it was in the holocaust of the 40's. "One ought to recognize," he wrote, "that the present political chaos is connected with the decay of language, and that one can probably bring about some improvement by starting at the verbal end To which we say Amen!

Reading through the Official Plan you don't have to go too deeply to realize some decay appears to have got a foothold here

In many areas the plan is vague, obscure and meaningless. Example: Parkland section, under Public Open Space and Recreation. It explains that Parkland is "lands designated "Public Open Space and Recreation" that have site characteristics suitable for the development of indoor recreational facilities, outdoor active recreation ancillary structures, and furniture. It should be noted that lands designated "residential" on Schedule A may be designated for park land on secondary plans."

The way it reads it is putting all householders in the city under notice that their yards, if the plan is passed, may at any time in the future be designated for park land by the filing of the Secondary Plan which shows their property as being amended in its use from Residential to Parkland.

For example, If you fell "afoul" of city hall you might find a public park bench or picnic table placed in your front yard, a life guard stationed at your swimming pool, a hot dog stand on your barbecue and candy wrappers all over the place.

This of course, the planners will tell you, is absurd. It is an extreme example, granted.

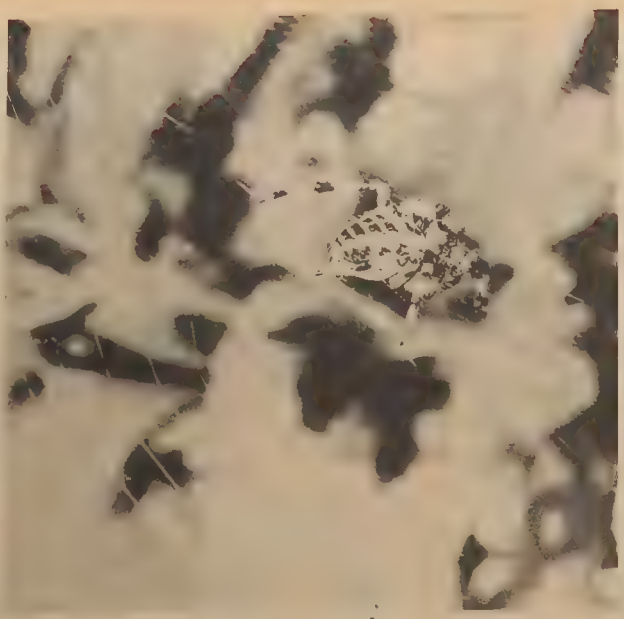
But, as any lawyer will tell you, it is not the intent of a paragraph that matters in the end, it is how it is interpreted in a court of law

We have contacted a couple of lawyers who have interpreted this particular piece as meaning that indeed anybody's property shown as residential on Schedule A could be designated as a park at any time in the future if this plan is passed.

The above is just one example of imprecise use of the language when attempting to convey the intent of the planners.

It would have made a lot of common sense to have employed a professional journalist to ascertain precisely what it was the planners wished to say and to let that individual cut out all the garbage which clutters up the text of the plan and thoroughly confuses anyone not intimately involved in planning.

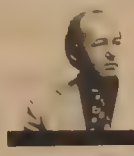
We suggest the entire plan undergo a thorough re-write. It would be better to wait a few more years for something meaningful than to push through a bunch of gobbledegook with which we will be hopelessly confused right until the year 1984



Along came a spider....

Our friend and sometimes enemy, the lowly spider, weaves his intricate and delicate web outside the basement window of our photographer Jim Sabyan. Sabe was so interested in the subject he spent over an hour setting up this shot for our editorial page.

Take your hot car to Moose Jaw



by peter brouwer

This is about a couple of gallons of Michigan water, an overheating engine, a couple of General Motors mechanical experts, a very hot trip across the prairies, and a down-to-earth little guy from Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan

What's so different about Michigan water? It lasts longer. Let me explain.

Two weeks ago we set out by car for Calgary, Alta. to attend the annual convention of the Canadian Community Newspapers Association. It's the kind of gathering publishers go to, to exchange ideas about writing, advertising, circulation and business methods. I had never driven across the prairies and had been told that everyone ought to do it at least once in his life, if for no other reason than to get an idea of how big we really are. We are big. Now I know. We are beautiful too. More about that another time

First back to the Michigan water

There we were, barely five miles past Orillia when the red warning light on the dash went on...again It had been giving me problems all summer. I had checked it out with a couple of Guardian Maintenance mechanics, who assured me all was well. I'd even brought the car in to a racing car mechanic who was supposedly an expert on "hot" cars. All assured me the Chevy was as good as new when we took off

The red light at Orillia, fortunately, came on just when we were in front of a service station. We cooled it. Added water and went on our way. "You water is low," said the man "That's why it boils over on you."

All went fine all day. It was hot, but the airconditioning took care of all that.

Until we got to within 50 miles of the Soo. Red light, again. In the middle of nowhere

An American from Michigan stopped to see what our problem was

"No wonder," said he "On a hot day like this you can't drive with your air conditioning on. The engine will overheat."

Said I, "it shouldn't. It's factory installed and all that."

Said he, it will, mark my words."

He than filled up my radiator with two gallons of Michigan water, draining most of his motor home's drinking water supply

We went on our way. Happy. Problem solved "Amazing", we said, "how these Americans know about cars But, of course, they've been in the age of airconditioning longer than us Canadians."

All went fine from the Soo to Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan. It was very hot Even the breeze with all the windows down did little for us. But the red warning light stayed off

We tanked up at an Esso station just outside Moose Jaw on Highway 1. The man shook his head at us 'stupid Ontarians."

Why were we not using our air conditioning on a hot day like this?

Explanation followed

He called me inside

"For seven bucks I'll fix your problems once and for all," said he

I explained about being from the Motor City and having had the car checked by professionals and wondered out loud what he could know that they wouldn't

He brought forth a little plastic jug and a piece of hose

In three minutes he attached same to the inside of the grill and the hose to the overflow of the radiator

Following that we drove up and down Rocky Mountains, air conditioning on, everything fine Red light off

I have never really been able to understand just what makes a radiator boil or not boil, but a gallon-size plastic jug does wonders for mine.

The moral of this story is that if you have a "hot" car, try and manage to get to Moose Jaw, Sask. it's a lovely trip. And tell the fellow at the Esso station, first one on the right, on your way from this area, that I sent you

the mainliner

Stephen Leacock is probably Canada's best read author even if he isn't the best. But last week reporter Linda Sutton found even searching out a bit of Leacock humor can be difficult when she tried several local sources, including the Oshawa Public Library and Durham College Library, to discover the title of a well-remembered Leacock tale. When neither library could trace the information, Sutton turned to Orillia's Stephen Leacock Home, where the administrator gave her the answer she wanted without stopping for a breath. Lesson learned: when you want something, go to the source. Turn over in your grave, Stephen Leacock.

How many middle-aged men do you know who have beautiful white teeth. Take a look at the next photograph you see of an Ontario cabinet minister. Gorgeous teeth is one thing most have in common. Do you suppose they're capped? And if so, does the dental work come out of party or government funds? Will one of the prerequisites for a successful candidate be in the future capped teeth?

It seems ironical that while the chap who squeals his tires going around a corner is subject to a fine under the law, members of a wedding party are allowed to tour the city blasing horns continously without so much as a 'quiet down, you're disturbing people' hurled at them. Talk about noise polution!

Perhaps we're at fault for still thinking of the mounties in the romantic terms of Rosemarie and Sergeant Preston, but the staff of This Week felt genuinely disillusioned and somewhat cheated when they discovered the Oshawa RCMP detachment wouldn't go for a photograph of one of their famous red-coated officers mounted on a horse. It seems none of the detectives stationed in the city can ride one of the noble beasts. However the detachment did manage to come through with a closet-full of the various uniforms used in the RCMP's 100 years of service, so photographer Jim Sabyan could demonstrate his photographic ingenuity. What would you say to that, Nelson Eddie?

Monday September 3 is Labor Day, a holiday, which means no mail service, closed liquor and beer stores and the usual mass exodus to the cottage country. Durham Region residents are urged to drive safely to and from the cottage and make the last holiday weekend of the summer an enjoyable one.

The Brouwer family (after some summer vacations and weekends away) returned to church on Sunday. They were late and entered during the opening hymn. Said the minister, when they were just comfortably settled in and had partaken of the last line of the last verse of the opening hymn, "and that's the way it goes in this church. We sing our opening hymn, during which the Brouwers arrive, and after that we've got almost a full house." One thing about the Rev. D. N. Habermehl of the Aion Church on Adelaide, he's got a sense of humour. One thing about Brouwer, he's got the last word.

There we were, ready for yet another barbecue feast in the backyard, and we ran out of fuel . . . So off to the all-hours-open corner grocery and what do we find but that fuel costs very nearly double of what we bought it for in the supermarket whose price in this case must have been right . . .

"Second Class Mail Registration No. 2429"

24 hours seven days a week?

Don't run low on gas in the City of Oshawa after 7 p.m. If you haven't got enough to get to the city limits you're out of luck...

A number of times on this page we have had occasion to be critical of the Oshawa bylaw that regulates hours kept by service stations

It's an especially silly situation because right at the city limits, east of west, you can fill up to your heart's content at all hours.

The hours bylaw in the case of service stations is a piece of protective legislation that is perhaps fine for a number of service stations, but it causes considerable inconvenience to the consumer who, in the end, is the legislator.

So now comes the argument of retail store hours.

It would be convenient to the consumer if all stores were open 24 hours a day, seven days a week. If you find a hole in your dark blue sock while getting dressed for church on Sunday morning, don't panic, drop by your friendly department store and get a new pair...

That may be an extreme example, and so is perhaps the 24-hour idea and the seven-day suggestion.

But have you considered how long it will be before we get to just that point? If the present trend of more and more evenings and holidays continues - and it will, unless legislation is passed to stop it - life in this part of Ontario is going to be pure hell for a lot of families.

Elsewhere in this issue the manager of a large retail store in Oshawa makes a plea for some sanity to be restored to the jungle of store hours.

We were pleasantly surprised to hears Simpsons-Sears Manager H. R. Borden go to bat for the family. Borden obviously feels there are some things that come before profits and increasing business.

We urge our readers to take note of this retailer's observations.

There are three major sides to the store hour debate. The employee and his family, the retailer who tries to squeeze out an extra buck by having a gigantic holiday special or a Wednesday night special, or what have you, and the developer, who owns the store or the centre in which the store is located and who wants to see that sales figures increase because he gets a percentage off the top.

This is a free country. The entrepreneur has a right to be. He has the right to do well.

What he does not have is the right to do away with the very foundation of society - the family

Think about it. Unless we, the people, demand legislation that will safeguard us against unscrupulous all-hours-operators, we're going to destroy what already is beginning to look like a "little bit" of quality of life that's left.

We urge readers to press their member of parliament to take a people-oriented stand on the store hour debate.

Living is learning

At least some of our legislators have discovered that education is not a process that begins when a child enters Kindergarten and ends when he leaves school

In a report to the Ontario Legislature, the select committee of MPPs on the utilization of educational facilities have pressed for the adoption of the principle that education is a life-long experience and gained not only in the classroom but in many different surroundings. The committee's interim report, tabled in June, stresses the need to make the schools an integral part of the community, facilities to be used by everyone not just kids between the ages of 5 and 19, and their teachers.

The report has two thrusts - that learning should be taken out into the community and that the community should be brought into the schools.

The school facilities are not being fully utilized by their restrictive hours and summer closings. The community is not being fully utilized by being allowed to contribute its expertise to students.

Getting away from the 'schools alone are for education alone' attitude is both practical in the financial sense and advantageous in broadening the basis of education. Both the students and the community will profit from it.

Most adults in Ontario are the product of a school system that has been isolated from the community. And in general the education system perpetuates this attitude, although a number of boards are now paying token recognition to the philosophy of community use of schools.

This attitude is reinforced by the subsidy system of Othe Ontario ministry of education that doesn't give active encouragement to community participation in education and to the utilization of schools for other community activities.

The special committee has taken a giant step forward in government thinking on education, utilizing some of the best from education systems around the world.

A freer, more flexible understanding and use of educational opportunities is begoming increasingly essential as more people have more leisure time to fill. Education should become, as the committee advocates, a service to the people of the community, not the exclusive purview of the teacher.

The committee has produced an exciting and thought-provoking first report. Subsequent reports promise to be just as innovative and barrier-breaking.

However, they are worthless unless the Ontario Government recognizes that it must get out of its education rut and move with the times.

Appeal for Compensation

Sir:

In 1968 I suffered a fall while I was working and have been taking medical treatments and drugs to ease the pain ever since

At that time I applied for, and received, workman's compensation to pay for the treatments and drugs even though I was still able to work. Since then, I have been treated by a number of doctors, the last of which was unaware that he was to file reports with the compensation people.

I learned a couple of months ago that the workman's compensation board has stopped paying for my prescriptions, only by visiting our druggist and finding we have run up a bill.

My husband is soon to retire and then we will have no drug plan which will subsidize paying for those drugs. In the meantime, he has been on compensation too, and it has been a little difficult making ends meet.

Is there any way workman's compensation could review my case and perhaps continue paying for the drugs? My treatments are covered by OHIP.

Mrs. Helen Strutt,
Oshawa.

A spokesman for the Workman's Compensation Board who reviewed your file said because you haven't appealed the rejection of funds paying for your drugs, it would be a relatively simple matter to re-open your case.

You would have to ask your doctor to submit an up-to-date medical report. He would of course have to be able to relate your present treatments to the fact that the initial injury was sustained during a fall at work. He would also be asked to submit a letter explaining why he did not file continuing reports on your progress. That in itself, the spokesman says, would be enough to open your file for review.

Your chances would be better, he says, if you also submitted a personal letter explaining the problem you and your husband will have shortly with your drug plan. He says that should be sufficient and payment may be forwarded on that information. However, if it is not, he says you will still be given the chance to appeal to the board, and if you like, make a personal appearance explaining your case.

Good luck.

Sir:

On August 8 I put my car into Moring's Garage in Oshawa because of an engine knock. I asked them to repair the car as soon as possible and put in new plugs, points and condensor. When I picked up the car my bill came to $69.42, of which $29.42 was for parts and $40 for labor

At the time I was in such a hurry I did not complain about the bill, but now feel the labor charge was far too high. Consultation with another mechanic indicated to me that the work should have been easily done in about two and a half hours. No mechanic alive is worth $20.00 an hour. Could you look into this.

Garnet Knight

This Week contacted the manager of Moring's Garage and was told they had checked your invoice and found nothing out of line. Al Moring, manager of the garage, says it took 3.3 hours to do the work and at $12 an hour plus the parts and repairing your lights the bill is right on.

Perhaps the problem is, says Moring, that you aren't aware that the mechanic gets approximately $6 an hour while the garage gets the same. At any rate, he told us he'd phone you to explain since he values you as a customer.

Rossland Park

'the ultimate in carefree living'

Nursery school teacher Heather Payne and three-year-old Angela pet one of the animals at the Rossland Park day care centre.

Pre-school awareness at Rossland Park day nursery

The smiling faces of happy children can be seen every weekday at the Rossland Park Day Nursery where the unstructered program allows the real freedom of play

"We open at 7:45 a.m when the children come into the playroom until about 9:30 a.m when they have story time and snacks of juice and cookies," says Carole Lowes, supervisor of the day nursery

The outside play begins at 10 a.m. with equipment ranging from tunnels to swings A swimming pool located next door to the nursery is also used

Lunches for the children ages two to five, include favorites such as sloppy-Joes, hot dogs and fish and chips

More stories and outside play follow the afternoon nap until parents pick them up The nursery closes at 6 p.m

Our unstructured program allows children the important socializing process and also prepares them for kindergarten and the break-away from parents," says Miss Lowe

She is a graduate in early childhood education as are her fulltime staff members, Heather Payne and Pat Coletti The nursery also has three parttime staff members

Miss Lowe says this training has enabled her and her staff to be aware of the importance of young children's development

"If a parent asks if their child is ready for kindergarten, we tell them," she says "We look out for things such as if a child is having problems and just sitting back - afraid of other children

The nursery keeps all the applications on file as well as progress reports on each child which may be of help later when the child begins school

We advise parents when they ask what they should do about certain problems but the parents pretty well take it from there", she says

The whole area of day care is an important one as seen by Miss Lowe and her staff

Day care is very important because parents have to work," she says "There should be more good ones There is really a desperate need

The problem of adjustment is a major one and she says very few children are immune to this upset

Most children find it hard to break away from the parent and it is hard for the parent too," she says "I just tell the parent to give it a couple of days until the child realizes everyone else is having fun and joins in

Once the parents realize their children are enjoying the activities of the nursery run by qualified staff, she says they too can then relax

The children are divided into groups of seniors and juniors and, although she has been asked to take older children ages six to ten Miss Lowe says the facilities are not available

I realize there is a great need for it, but we just can't handle the older age groups at this time"

There are a few openings still available for children ages two to five The maximum capacity the nursery is 35 children

The fees for day care are $22 for a full week and $11 for half days The nursery is open to the public as well as to residents of Rossland Park

Reader tells Fred to take the axe to that PUC pole

Sir:

Have you observed that very lonely Public Utilities Pole embedded in the pavement of our latest expressway, Bond Steet?

Try and find your way west on this newest Cromeplated avenue and cast your eyes to the left, between what used to be Prince Street and Church

That lonely pole is a sight to behold
Come on, Fred, take the axe to it!

Autofest displays

Sir:

This year the Autofest Committee are urging all merchants to decorate their place of business to help promote and become involved in the Autofest Celebrations A special trophy will be presented to the outlet with the best display

Burns Shoe Store is a good example of the kind of display requested. At this outlet Ray Pleau, immediate past president of the Oshawa and District Coin Club, will have his Canadian National Exhibition prize winning R.S. McLaughlin display for all to view. Don Anthony of Burns will put the display in prior to Autofest

Those requesting Autofest Display information should contact 725-6852

The grotesque TD Bank

Sir:

Somebody has recently done a great injustice to the downtown area of Whitby

Returning from our two weeks vacation we were most shocked as well as disappointed to see the old Toronto Dominion Bank building, located on the four corners, turned into a grim grotesque landmark for the Town

Hopefully the owners have realized their error and will either return it to its pleasant bright appearance or at least add a little white trim

Mesmer did it first

Sir:

Mr Brownlee is no more a new Pasteur, for in 1607 Anton Mesmer in Paris used magnets Later he used passes over the human body. Dr. Braid of England later found this wasn't necessary and could get the same results as Mesmer

Mr. Ross bemoans his fate in hypnosis This is only natural for he felt the public would understand. Not so Hypnotism is classed even today as mysterious as is Kung Fu - a lot of rot - and Chinese Acupuncture, which works

The young never consider that older people know something I have learned that human stupidity affects all people - young and old, rich and poor, ordinary and professional It is amazing and utterly ridiculous, especially from ignorant interviewers

Why all the rush?

Sir.

The one thing that makes me wonder about the new Official Plan now on its way in Oshawa is why all the rush?

For 20 years we've had what we've got now. I agree the plan needs updating and a new approach is long overdue

But why announce it when thousands of people are on holidays and hardly have an opportunity to react?

It is up to our city council to slow down the planners in this case. It seems they're in too big a hurry to ram this thing down our throats

No Santa Claus

Sir:

Thank you again for this week's issue of This Week".

On page 48 two letters by a member of the fair sex who signs her name beginning with Ms instead of the traditional Miss or Mrs

It is still nice to know that most ladies still sign their names proudly beginning with Miss or Mrs not Ms. Ms. to me is strictly for the birds

Parking is a conversational subject. It costs all of us money whether we like it or not. Whether we pay it through municipal taxes or meters is a matter of policy. All the same, it has to be paid for

Owning a car is a lot like marriage. For better or worse, richer or poorer, until death do us part. "Until death do us part" is more fact than fiction Read any newspaper for the deaths on our Highways after each busy week end, and also during the week

Our Oshawa General Hospital is one of the finest, most modern in the country. Its services are improving by leaps and bounds. The lives of many, many motorists have been saved after a serious auto smash-up by the skills of its dedicated staff

So the auto and our Hospital have a common denominator

The auto has played a big part in the very life blood of Oshawa over the years. The economy of this community would face flat on its face without it.

A number of years ago the parking spaces around the OGH were ample to handle all the visitors. Not so now. There is barely enough room for emergency parking. A parking garage is a must

Parkwood was a gift to the OGH from Col. Sam. As I understand, this parking garage was planned years before Col. Sam died to be built where it is being erected now. Col. Sam was wealthy and generous. But only to the deserving. He liked to see all people self supporting

So to Ms. of todays letters: We have a huge hospital We have a continual flow of emergencies every day They all arrive by some sort of gas-powered motor conveyence. Visiting hours have been extended People are being admitted and discharged in a steady flow each day. This was never anticipated when the hospital site was selected

So let's face it It is going to cost us money. We are fortunate to have space to erect a parking garage near the OGH. Toronto General Hospital doesn't have that space available

No Ms., when it comes to free parking for cars there is no such a thing as Santa Claus

As to the free parking for OGH employees, most factories and places of business provide free parking But is it really free? The cost of this parking is added to the cost of the product sold. So what is free about that?

So I say again, Ms., when it comes to free parking at any time for the auto it is just an illusion Where parking is concerned there is no such thing as a Santa Claus

Wait for the region?

Sir.

I see by the papers both Whitby and Oshawa are busily working away at new planning proposals for the two towns

Would it not make more sense to wait until regional government is in effect, so that the new politicians can take an overall view?

Backing for Lacrosse

Sir:

Well, here we are nearing the end of summer and your hockey write-ups are just as plentiful as ever! The hockey season seems to me to be one of the longest seasons of all. So, why is it that your sports page is full of hockey-gossip in the middle of summer, so much so, that you seem to neglect current summer sports activities

Lacrosse is the main sport that I think you have neglected this year, but it isn't the only one

How about local baseball and soccer teams. There are quite a few park league baseball and soccer teams that are in full swing and need that extra publicity. Besides that, your paper is delivered to residential areas enclosing parks Therefore, the chances are that in almost every house there will be a young boy or girl involved in some park league sport

It's true that the Junior "A" lacrosse season was not all that long this year, in Oshawa, that is, but what about the teams that Oshawa was beaten by. How are they standing up in the playoffs. Why, you'd think that the whole Junior "A" lacrosse season ended when the Gaels finished. I'd like to think that the Gaels and their fans are not poor losers and would be interested in knowing how the rest of the teams in the league are making out. I know I would be But when the Gaels finished nothing else was heard about the other "A" teams

Whether the Gaels were a winning team, this year or not is not the point They are a Junior A team and deserve as much or More coverage than any more teams in the summer. Hockey is an international money-game, but lacrosse is Canada's game, and the Gaels are Oshawa's own team I used "Oshawa's own team" because the team consists mainly of local people, unlike the Junior A hockey team that "imports" players

In the past, I've found your paper has had some good write-ups and pictures of sports and other public events. But next year, why can't your local newspaper give our local lacrosse team and the other local summer sports activities some good, solid backing? How about it?

Barbara Shetler

Bilingual - oui et non

Sir:

Congratulations to the organizers of the Ontario Summer Games events that took place in Oshawa recently, but I must chide them on one point that really irratated me

During the opening ceremonies, O Canada was sung in two languages. That's fine. But the first half was sung in French and the second half in English

I'm all in favor of Canada's bilingual policy, but after all this is Ontario and as far as I'm concerned the English half should have been sung first and then the French version

Some people near me obviously felt the same way as they even sat through the French version

Best wishes to you and your staff for the fine local news coverage that you provide

Mike seeks seat

Mike Breaugh

Representation, financing, communication and servicing are the four major problems Ald Mike Breaugh says will face Oshawa when it enters regional government

Breaugh makes the observations while announcing he will be a candidate for a regional councillors seat during the October 1 election

Representation of the major urban centre (of Oshawa) of a primarily rural region will require councillors who are both articulate and diligent in presenting the views of Oshawa from a position with less than a third of the votes, yet almost half of the population," he says

Breaugh says a councillor will also be faced with preserving and improving the levels of service required by Oshawa, and, at the same time, bringing rural servicing up to par

To economically finance this form of government, he says, will be difficult

As a campaign platform Breaugh says he will represent the people of Oshawa on a fulltime basis, using the skills of debate he has learned as a member of Oshawa council, the Central Ontario Joint Planning Board and the Central Lake Ontario Conservation Authority

"Services in the city of Oshawa must be improved and cannot be sacrificed as they are expanded to other areas in the region," Breaugh notes. "As other area municipalities demand these services, they must also be willing to pay for them."

To compensate for the already "saturated" mill rate, he says new areas of financing must be explored while the province lives up to its promise to subsidize the two-tiered system

The human element of government cannot be neglected," he stresses "People must still have communication with their elected officials and these politicians must remain responsive to the needs and desires of their citizens."

Breaugh, 31, married with two children, and currently Whitby St. Paul's School principal, says he will give full value "for the trust" of the people on a fulltime basis if elected

Notice of public hearings into the transmission of power from Middleport to Pickering

1. The Province of Ontario appointed Dr. Omond Solandt, under the Public Inquiries Act by Order-in-Council OC-2053/72 dated the 21st of June, 1972, as amended by Order-in Council OC-2947/72 dated the 13th of September, 1972 "to inquire into the transmission of power from Nanticoke to Pickering"

2. Following on the recommendations contained in Commissioner Solandt's Interim Report, dated the 31st of October, 1972, Mr. Bruce Howlett, environmental consultant, was retained by Commissioner Solandt to undertake a public study and to make recommendations on the best location for the 500 kV transmission lines between Middleport and Pickering

3. Mr. Howlett will file his report and recommendations pertaining to this matter, with the Commissioner, and will present an oral summary of the report and recommendations to interested parties, at a public hearing on September 13, 1973

4. Any interested party who wishes to present a brief related to this matter should file a copy of such a brief with the Secretary on or before October 5, 1973 indicating at the same time whether or not he wishes to speak to his brief at a subsequent public hearing

5 Any other interested party who wishes to make oral representations at the subsequent public hearing, either personally or through a representative, should indicate his intent to do so in writing, to the Secretary, on or before October 5, 1973

6. Commissioner Solandt will hold further public hearings on October 15, 17, 19, 22 and 24, 1973, (and on such additional days as may be required), in order that interested parties may have an opportunity to ask questions of Mr. Howlett, and to present evidence

7. The public hearings on September 13, October 16, 17, 19, 22, and 24, 1973, will be held in the Ontario Room, Macdonald Block, Queen's Park, Toronto, commencing at 9:30 a.m. To accommodate special circumstances, and unique local concerns, Commissioner Solandt will consider requests, by interested parties, to hold additional public hearings in other parts of Ontario, either day or evening sessions. All such requests however, should be filed with the Secretary on or before October 5, 1973

8 Copies of Mr. Howlett's report and recommendations will be on view in area Municipal Offices and the Solandt Commission office. Copies of all briefs will be on view at the Solandt Commission office. Individual copies of Mr. Howlett's report and recommendations may be purchased from the Ontario Government Bookstore, 880 Bay Street Toronto, M7A 1N8, for the sum of $5 00 each

Says store manager

Longer shopping hours mean poorer service

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is a submission by H.R.Borden, General Manager of Simpsons-Sears Ltd., Oshawa. Mr. Borden makes a plea for legislation to restore a measure of sanity to the jungle of store hours. According to Borden, there's more to it than dollars and cents. We agree there is. Much more. We invite readers to give the store hour dilemma their undivided attention for a while. And we welcome readers reaction to the subject. Let's hear from you!

On June 1st, 1973, Bill No 118, an Act to Provide for the Controlling of Hours in Retail Establishments, was presented by Leonard M. Reilly, a former businessman in Peterborough and now member for Eglinton in the Ontario legislature

The proposed legislation has the support and encouragement of many thousands of consumers, retailers and retail employees. With the development of longer store hours concern has been expressed in every area of Ontario by consumers, merchants and many organizations

The purpose of Bill 118 is to provide provincial legislation covering closing of a majority of retail stores on Sundays and statutory holidays as well as restricting night openings to Thursdays and Fridays

The proposed legislation is needed so as to restore a measure of sanity to the store hours situation that has led to virtual jungle law. The situation is to the direct advantage of a majority of shopping centres and some of the national chain store groups and to the disadvantage of both retail employees and those smaller stores who are unable to cope with long hours.

In an era when other businesses and industries are actively working towards a shorter work week (and more concentrated business hours) with more leisure time for employees, the drive by some retailers and shopping centres has been to longer business hours and virtually no holiday closings

Sundays, holy days and statutory holidays should not be reasons for another Spectacular Sales Event Such days should provide occasions when families can have the opportunity to be together

"Pause" day

The present action on the part of George A. Kerr, Secreatary of justice, in announcing the government's action to curtail shopping on Sundays and to provide a "pause" day is commendable but not enough

The consumer, the retail employee, and in particular, the independent retailer (in most cases small and family operated) requires protection of the government against those in retailing who are consistently working for shopping at later hours each evening, shopping on Sundays and on statutory holidays

Deterioration of service, courtesy, and general helpfulness is a direct outcome of extended shopping hours. Experienced management staffs are spread too thinly to effectively supervise the longer hours, with personnel training and service to the consumer suffering as a result

While it is possible for larger retailers and national chains to cope with extended hours, this inevitably lowers the standard of service offered by the use of fewer regular or experienced sales staff in extended hours. This occurs through a broader use of customer self-service, front door cashiering checkouts, with a greater dependence on part-time staff with limited experience

For this, the consumer experiences a lower quality of service or none at all and the net result is customer frustration, dissatisfaction, and mistreatment

The costs of longer hours to the retailer must have an inflationary effect on prices for which the consumer will eventually pay

The advocates

Chief advocates of extended hours are major discount stores and shopping centre developers. The first group provides little or no service other than a cashier so that the provision of sufficient qualified experienced sales staff is not a problem

As for the developers who obtain their rental revenues by a percentage of all sales volumes, they arrange their leases and no doubt prefer the longest retail hours possible. In most cases, their leases give them control over this matter to the eventual suppression of the smaller independent stores

The level of consumer and retailing support for a provincial store hours law is actually very great. There is also considerable support for regulated store hours which does not come from merchants themselves

The Ontario Federation of Labor has petitioned for such legislation, and a great many members of the Canadian Association of Consumers give the measur equal support In addition, the Ontario Chamber of Commerce representing local chamber and boards of trade in all parts of the province has given equal support

In fact, where store hours regulations are in effect in municipalities in Ontario such as Hamilton, Ottawa, and other cities and in the entire Province of Quebec, there has been no significant enforcement

In fact, where store hours regulations are in effect in municipalities in Ontario such as Hamilton, Ottawa and other cities and in the entire Province of Quebec, there has been no significant volume of public protest either against the regulation or its enforcement. This in itself, is a strong rebuttal to the discounters' charge that such regulation is not in the public interest

Surveys in a number of cities on consumer reaction to uniform store hours confirm that few people spend more than six hours per week shopping, and in many cases less than this

The employee

Hundreds of thousands of Ontario families have one or more members in retail employment Because of staggered working hours to accommodate night work and statutory holidays (Sundays in a growing number of cases) the social disruption makes it difficult if not impossible for these families to enjoy a reasonably normal family life together Quality of life throughout the province and the nation is an important part of living which needs to be retained

Finally, the merchandising business today can offer a very rewarding career for young people graduating from high school, community college, or university

The opportunities for advancement are almost unlimited in this very dynamic profession. But to suggest to these young people that they are stepping back into the dark ages of working nights, Sundays, and holidays has to be a complete condemnation of this part of today's competitive, free enterprise system that allows this sort of thing to happen. The Province of Quebec has had provincial law regulating store hours for a number of years now and experience shows that the system has been successful and is wisely accepted not only by the consumers but by the very same groups who would like to have longer hours and holiday shopping in Ontario

I strongly urge consumers, retail employees, and merchants to write to premier William G Davis, at the legislature and emphasize that the enactment of Bill 118 for the implementation of uniform store hours throughout the province is highly important if we are to maintain a note of sanity in retailing and to ensure that the quality of life in Ontario is important

City bus schedules revised to cut costs, improve service

It has become evident that last year's bus rescheduling did not work. So it is evident in fact that a new rescheduling has been worked out.

Effective September 4, all city buses will be running on a 20-minute schedule and there will be increased evening services. There will also be one major route revision.

Public Utilities Commission Chairman Dr. Brian Doherty, in making the announcement Monday, said the rescheduling will offer city passengers improved service.

"The rescheduling we did last year looked terrific on paper, but the operating costs were higher," Doherty said. "We have worked out a new system which will carry the same number of passengers but without the extra cost and at the same time offer the same conveniences.

The PUC will be mailing 28,000 new route schedules and maps along with an explanatory letter from the commission to every household in the city informing residents of the changes.

All routes, with the exception of the Rossland Road bus, will be running on a 20-minute schedule as opposed to a 30-minute run.

Most runs, according to officials, have been modified but there is only one major route change.

Passengers in the Simcoe North-Nonquon area previously boarded a bus and had to go to Durham College before the bus would turn and head back for downtown Oshawa.

Under the new schedule, a bus will still go to Durham but passengers wishing to go straight downtown can take the number 5 bus, the Oshawa Boulevard-Nonquon-Applehill bus, which will travel straight downtown via Ritson Road North.

Evening service has been extended to Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays from just the latter two evenings. The buses will run every 30 minutes in the evening to the downtown shopping area until 10 p.m.

Also effective September 4, bus terminal points in the downtown area will revert back to Bond Street from King Street following completion of road reconstruction.

Doherty said the transit system, which last year carried 3.5 million passengers, is expected to increase its patronage with the new scheduling during the next year by 15 per cent, or 500,000 persons. Officials expect to increase the system's revenue by the additional passengers by $89,000.

Last year, the passenger revenue was $595,719.

Public Utilities Commission Chairman Dr. Brian Doherty

More ways available at Durham for part timers

Part time students at Durham college can work their way to a diploma by taking extension courses.

And now there are more courses than ever for them to choose from in selecting credits to make up the equivalent of the daytime diploma.

This fall Durham has again expanded its continuing education program in all areas. In addition it will be offering off-campus courses at both Ajax and Uxbridge high schools. A comprehensive calendar, listing more than 200 courses, will be delivered to 67,000 households in the college's service area early in September.

General interest courses this fall will include conversational French, Spanish and Italian women's studies, hobby farming, contemporary world religions, and ethnic cultures and history. There are over 50 general interest courses offered.

Applied arts courses range from basic photography to home nursing. Communication and Language courses include advertising copywriting, and both print and broadcast journalism.

There are eleven courses in computers and data processing for the business and technology divisions and once again, the college is offering the Canadian Power Squadron course, of interest to boating enthusiasts.

Durham continues to offer a broad selection of courses in finance and economics, management and organization, marketing advertising and sales, and business mathematics and statistics.

There are secretarial courses in basic typing, Forker and Pitman shorthand, medical science, and advanced typing.

Technology courses have been considerably expanded as 43 courses will be offered.

There are special extension certificate programs designed to help students increase their advancement opportunities in specialized areas such as advanced electronics, computer concepts, mechanical design and numerical control.

Because advanced technical evening courses are being phased out, the technology division now offers special extension certificates based on 300 hours of classroom instruction. Individual course credits may be accumulated to obtain a technology diploma equivalent to the two, and three-year daytime programs, provided the subjects taken apply specifically to the daytime diploma programs.

The college continues to offer academic upgrading courses, a modular training program for stationary engineers, an accounting correspondence program, a law clerk's course, management programs for the hospitality and tourist industry and courses for the Purchasing Management Association of Canada, the Canadian Institute of Traffic and Transportation, the Ontario Real Estate Association, the Society of Industrial Accountants of Ontario, and the Certified General Accountants Association of Ontario.

Durham also offers management seminars, customized for a company or industry as well as university extension courses through Scarborough College, University of Toronto.

In his foreward to the 1973 Durham extension brochure college president Dr Gordon Willey emphasizes that it is essential for those currently in business and industry to keep step with changes by acquiring new or upgraded skills to be prepared for new job opportunities.

He points to the many credit courses now offered at night, so that the part-time student can achieve the same goals as fulltime students.

Evening registration for Durham's fall programs in continuing education will begin Wed., Sept. 19 and continue Thursday and the following Monday.

Registration may also be made by mail, or in person weekdays from 9 a.m. to 4:45 p.m. Most extension courses begin the week of October 1.

Chance to return a favor at blood clinic

Thousands of people donated blood to the Red Cross just before vacation time so in case you had an accident on your holiday, it would be there.

Now's your chance to return the favor since you've come back.

The Red Cross will hold a blood donors clinic Thurs., Sept. 6 at St. Gregory's Auditorium at 190 Simcoe St. N. from 1:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. and from 6-9 p.m. during the evening.

Lame duck board will have chance to think says Edmondson

With only one month to go before the Oct. 1 election, the Ontario County Board of Education will become what its chairman calls, "a lame duck board."

"Personally," says Chairman Norman Edmondson, "I feel this period from October to when the new board takes over January 1, is an opportunity for the board to study many aspects of education which would be more difficult to look into with constantly evolving policy matters to deal with."

Norm Edmondson

During this time he hopes the board will have the chance to study a number of policies and examine some special aspects of education in Ontario County with the input of the lay point of view the board members represent

Although he says he cannot speculate what will happen when the new board takes office in January, he says the present board has done its utmost in trying to see that there will be as little disruption as possible when regional government relocates some schools to other jurisdictions

An area which he is particularly pleased with as chairman of the board during the last year is the avoidance of salary negotiation disputes with teachers

'We can look forwad to a considerable degree of harmony and enthusiasm on the part of the members of the staff when school starts this September," he says "In a spirit of cooperation, problems under negotiation have been resolved, benefitting the people of the county.'

Although he has not yet read all of the Interim Report of the Select Committee Studying Utilization of Education Facilities, chaired by MPP Charlie McIlveen, Edmondson says there are some points in the report he doesn't entirely agree with

"Not only the Ontario County Board of Education but its predecessors (Oshawa and Whitby), were in some respects pioneers in the development of the community use of schools making them available to the public," he says

He says that personally, he feels the first function of education facilities is to educate the young, the second is to educate adults and, if these two groups are served, then other community uses of the facilities can be served

The other areas should be served but the first function is to provide education," he says

The use of resourse people within the community to teach in the schools as recommended by the report, is already being done says Edmondson

"This is done very extensively throughout the county with imaginative programs by individual teachers calling upon community resourse people," he says "I myself have been invited to classrooms and many people find themselves being asked to do this but it is not the sort of thing I think you can legislate We have to rely on the teachers and their professional judgement

Designing schools for easy access

The handicapped student is stressed in the report Edmondson agrees that schools should make provision to integrate the handicapped into the regular school system

I think we should have integration to the greatest extent that we possibly can while still upholding the same values of education,' he says "I am aware though, of the very real and obstructive consequences when a teacher is teaching a class of 25 to 35 children, more or less, to have to single out one student for special attention This puts demands on the teacher and the class, both on their time and understanding If that occurs, I'm obliged to take the position that in the interest of the majority, the handicapped be taught in a separate environment

He says the reason for his interest in education and what he sees as the goal of educators is the instilling within the student the desire to never stop learning

Only with knowledge can we gain understanding of other people and only with understanding can we really achieve peace, not only internationally, but in a personal sense. For that reason I think that education in the broadest sense of the word, hopefully never stops

Tom Wells would give power to school boards for improved people programs

Tom Wells

By Linda Sutton
Staff Writer

Power to school boards would solve a lot of problems, according to Education Minister Tom Wells

Wells, himself a former trustee and chairman of the Scarborough board of education before entering provincial politics, believes that the way to make school boards more effective is to give them more power and responsibility

He rejects any suggestion that responsibility that education be transferred to the regional council and school boards eliminated And the education minister finds the proposed community action councils of citizens, advocated by some MPPs including Charlie McIlveen, a cumbersome way of encouraging community input into education matters

In fact, he would like to see jurisdiction for all 'soft services' - recreation, health libraries and other people programs - switched from the municipal council to the school board

This would open up a wide vista of opportunities for providing services to people.

School and recreation facilities could be included in a single centre, for example, says Wells, without going through the time-consuming and complicated process necessary now to coordinate the time and budgeting concerns of municipal councils and school boards

School boards would be able to make use of other community facilities for instructional purposes while the community use of schools programs now operative services in many school areas would become more effective, he says

A soft services board enlarged from the school board would also be able to provide day care services in coordination with the school system for both preschoolers and for children of working parents

School boards in the past, Wells admits, have been more removed from direct public contact than have municipal councils This is partly because parents tend to communicate directly with their principals instead of with the school boards, he explains Only if they get no satisfaction at that level do they try to find a trustee who will help them bring the matter before the boards he says

Boards themselves have encouraged this kind of approach, says the education minister

Then too, he says, the public has rated an alderman above a school trustee in the political hierarchy

Better supply

I always felt it should be the other way around says Wells

The schools spend about as much money as do the municipal councils, he says, and they have the important responsibility of educating the community's children

This kind of attitude would be corrected, he says, if the jurisdiction of school boards were expanded to all soft services School trustees already have the qualifications since their job has been to provide services to people says the education boss

My experience has been that services to people are often left to the end by municipal councils, after they have set aside money for roads and sewers and so on The kind of board I'm proposing would have a different set of priorities

He points out the ever-increasing importance of a community providing services to people as they have more leisure time to fill and must cope with the problems and stresses of an increasingly mechanized society

Report criticised

The interim report of the legislature's special committee on utilization of educational facilities has a number of good points, the education minister concedes, especially recommendations about and open' university based on correspondence courses

But in general, Wells feels the recommendations of the committee are premature, unrealistic, or invalid

For example, the report criticizes Ontario Schools for their reluctance to participate fully in a policy of community use of schools

This is misleading, he says, since many school boards are heavily into this kind of program and have been successful in integrating into the community The schools no longer operate in isolation from the community as the report claims, he says

Much of the criticism of implementation of this policy in Ontario is based on comparison with the innovative system of community recreational programs in Flint, Michigan schools, says the education minister

"But they miss the point that the school board there runs recreation and everything"

Enlarging the reach of the school boards would complement the renewed trend to decentralize administration of education says Wells

Decentralization

Ontario is at the beginning of a decentralization cycle after having perfected a system of centralization, he notes

The province is encouraging decentralization and the harmonizing philosophy that schools are not and should not be alike. A high standard of education can be delivered across the province while allowing each school freedom to satisfy and respond to individual community's differences and needs

Despite his beliefs that the system can eventually be improved and expanded, Wells remains convinced that enough has happened in the education field in the last three years

I believe that this period of major change is just about at an end, for the time being," he says

What we face over the next few years will be a period of refinement, during which we will put the polish on the new structure which has been developed "

But maybe, in a" few years the time will come for more innovation

Regional school board will remain incomplete

The inconsistent boundaries of the Durham regional school system will stay that way for a while, says Education Minister Tom Wells

When regional government for the area was announced in May, the boundaries of the Ontario County school boards were adjusted to partly coincide with the regional boundaries

But there was one major exception. The new Town of Newcastle - a combination of Darlington, Bowmanville, Newcastle and Clarke Township - won't be included in the Durham regional school system. It will remain part of the Northumberland school board

At that time the province promised Newcastle would at some unspecified future time be brought under the jurisdiction of the Durham Region for education purposes

In an exclusive interview with This Week, Wells explained that the circumstances that determined the original decision have remained unchanged

The decision was founded on the damage that removing the new town would do to the Northumberland school system, he explained. "To take Newcastle out of the board would have changed the character of that board so drastically while not having it would not hurt the Ontario County Board," he said.

The split system shouldn't make much difference to the students either way, said the education minister, since no change in schools would be involved

The future of the area to the east of the Durham Region is still hanging in the air," he says. " There is varying talk about what will happen there. We would rather wait until a decision has been made or until circumstances allow the changeover than disrupt the board at this point in time

While Wells would not say whether the province is considering making the change to coincide with the Durham Regional Council's second term and school board elections in 1976, he promised that the public of the area would be thoroughly involved in the decision-making process

Changes in schools and teaching methods make people think education isn't as good as it was

Discipline in schools looks different nowadays and that causes a problem for a lot of parents, admits education minister Tom Wells

Schools always have to have some type of discipline just to accomplish something, but most don't follow the same kind of sitting-in-straight-rows-facing-the-front-kind of discipline we all knew and loved as children, he points out.

"Because schools are so different today, people equate what goes on there with lack of discipline," says Wells

Children today sit in circles at desks or on the floor, converse with one another and seemingly putter away while the teacher walks around looking over the groups and helping out on an apparently casual basis

"People shudder at that," says the education minister,"but there is discipline there The kids are busy working - often together - doing a job Learning to work on your own is a discipline."

About three out of every four letters received from the public in Wells office are complaints about the lack of discipline in school rooms, according to a Wells' aide

People who are happy with a system usually don't say so," Wells comments

The open concept school which often comes in for criticism, is simply an architectural concept The same teaching principles are employed in both the open concept schools and in traditionally designed schools, he points out

'Our problem is that some of us can't equate learning with that kind of activity

Another popular fallacy, says the education minister is that we receive our education" exclusively in school. But education, he says, is a life long experience, a product of many different experiences and situations

The credit system, however, gives both students and their parents an opportunity to make a choice about the child's educational future, he says Previously, the choice was almost exclusively the school's says Wells

There are a few wrinkles to be straightened out, he concedes

'But over the years I'm sure that it will be shown to be an excellent advance without which we would be in difficulty with educating our children for a rapidly changing world

"The tragedy of the thing," he says, "is that it has been misrepresented as a completely free system

Actually, he says, students and their parents have simply been given more opportunity and flexibility within a basic framework laid out by the individual schools

And Wells also rejects criticism that the schools are introducing "'mickey mouse" courses instead of encouraging the traditional subjects like Latin and Greek

There's the feeling, he says, "that, if a student takes something he really likes, it's a mickey mouse course and that there must be something really wrong with it."

Ceilings will stay while search for better method goes on says Wells

The province is still looking for improved methods by which to control education spending, says education minister Tom Wells.

But for the time being the controversial ceiling device to limit the cost of educating each child will remain in effect, he says

"I won't say the system is perfect and can't be changed," says Wells "We're still looking for different methods and if we can find one that is more acceptable we will consider it thoroughly "

Over the past 25 years 2 million pupil spaces have been built in Ontario, says the education minister, a quantity that now just about satisfies the demand

"The real problem facing us now," he says, "is that, with the declining public school population, we have the space available but not always in the right place

Requests for new schools in developing areas when there are other nearby schools not being utilized to be capacity will have to be closely scrutinized

'Bussing can't be ruled out as a possibility," he

"The days of a school for every community may no longer be a necessity

However, he stresses, the need for a school will not be allowed to delay housing construction

Housing is so short we won't want lack of funds for a new school holding up housing starts. Instead, we want to encourage housebuilding to go ahead as quickly as possible

This may mean making alternate arrangements for school accommodation or somehow finding the necessary money, says Wells

Picked in its Prime

The more you know about whisky, the better for OFC 8-Year Old. The Prime Canadian.

For starters New OFC 8-Year Old is aged a full 2 years longer than either of the two largest selling premium brands Thus, age alone, should make us better. But any good distiller will tell you, it takes more than time to make a whisky prime

The truth about age

2-year Old Canadian rye is pale, harsh and unmatured Around 12, it's darker and has begun to take on a heavy 'woods' taste. In between 2 and 12, at one point in time Canadian whisky is in "The Prime of Life" golden, mellow, smooth and full-bodied

8 years is "Prime"

In our opinion, 8 years old is "Prime " That's why OFC 8-Year Old is 8 years old And only 8 years old

"Prime" is more than time

Schenley puts a lot more into OFC than time: Only 100% Canadian grains and only deep-welled water. Every drop is distilled four times, and aged in hand-charred white oak barrels for a full 8 years

Finally we blend after aging

Why after? So that, despite differences from barrel to barrel, OFC never differs from bottle to bottle Or glass to glass 120 separate taste tests ensure it and each bottle carries this numbered back label This is Schenley's Guarantee of "Prime "

8-Year Old Quality "Prime Quality." Thousands are switching to OFC and taste is the reason.

Try OFC 8-Year Old. We think you'll find it a very rewarding experience.

JOHN MULDER, Route 97, Townline North, is the top This Week carrier for the first three months of operation under the paper's new voluntary pay system. He collected 50 cents a month from 78.6 per cent of his customers, during May, June and July. John's reward was an extra $100 bonus. Eight of his colleagues won $20 each for being the runners up. They were Mark Hooper, North Ridge, Darryl McFarlane, Jones; Cathe Weaver, Trent; Kathy Sabyan, Oxford; Dave Wellington, Bloor Street East, Ronnie Berg, Bernhard Crescent; Kevin Easby, Arhem Drive and Dale Smith, Cadillac South. All nine and their 436 colleagues are out again this week for the August collection and more prizes in September. Voluntary pay helps carriers earn more money, rewards them extra for their efforts and assists This Week in its efforts to produce an ever better community newspaper.

Won't say yes or no to airport — Cafik

PICKERING — Ontario Riding MP Norm Cafik says he is still in no position to say whether the proposed Pickering airport is needed or not

Cafik says, although he'd "rather Pickering stay the same", he has other responsibilities as a member of parliament so the matter must be left up to the people

He says he's not an expert as to the airport's need or location and so can't give a "yes or no" answer on the issue In fact, he says, the people don't want a yes or no answer from him

The matter he says, will have to be settled by the board of inquiry into the need and location of the airport and "I can't say if it's needed, and I don't apologize for it

As a result of a massive survey of the area done by his office, Cafik says, as he sees it, "the people are not opposed to it

Whether or not there has been an increase in his political support in the riding as the result of his actions on behalf of those affected by the airport decision, Cafik says simply, "I'm my work has been good i the people so that they would like to support me then I appreciate it But I'll still do my job

Broadbent wants Liberals to try NDP way to curb inflation

To stop inflation, said Oshawa-Whitby MP Ed Broadbent, the Liberal government should try to roll back increasing food and housing costs

'About 65 per cent of our inflation is caused by rising food and housing costs," Broadbent said. "I think that is something the government doesn't recognize when it tries its crude tightening of the economy."

Broadbent made the comments from his Ottawa office following a two-day caucus meeting of 25 of the 31 NDP MPs to decide what to do about inflation Canada's number one current crisis, and whether the NDP should continue to support the minority Liberal government

Broadbent said the caucus decided that it wouldn't be appropriate to decide to bring down the Liberals as a party What it was more interested in looking at, he said, was particular pieces of legislation and whether or not it could support that legislation

If we support that legislation then the Liberals stay in office," he said, "but it would be the same if the Tories were in office"

Instead of having blood flow all over Parliament when it reconvenes (officially on Oct. 15,) as NDP Leader David Lewis put it, Broadbent said the caucus decided to present proposals to fight inflation to the Liberal government and hope it implements them

'At this time we don't support what could be called the 'Stanfield-Nixon' proposal of wages and price freezes," he said "We don't support the Liberals either because they haven't done much We think we have the right approach and we can only hope the Liberals listen with care"

Many people have criticized the NDP for "crying wolf", first saying they wouldn't support the minority government unless they did this or that, and then finally toning down their outcry and deciding to continue their support

Sabre Rattling

'We didn't want to indulge in 'sabre rattling' and giving ultimatums and I think we have been consistent by looking at the legislation (and not the party in power) and we think this is the direction we should be taking," he said "A lot of editorial writers may be surprised. The test will come when Parliament is called back, and we welcome that Just watch how we vote."

If the caucus agrees with Liberal legislation, Broadbent said it will vote in favor of it, and vice versa

'I don't think anyone should expect a political drama with us bringing down the government," he said "I don't think serious politics should be approached that way."

The NDP advocates a three-pronged attack to bring down, or at least level off, inflation, he said

The first step of the proposal would be to revamp the food prices review board to "toughen" it so that it would not only be able to review, but roll back prices when they seem to be unwarranted and particularly "gouging", he said

Profiteering

'Whatever else food chains are doing, they are profiteering," Broadbent charged "Dominion Stores and Loblaws have been caught flat-footed by the press'

During the crucial period in the past few weeks when food prices soared far beyond expectations, he said the NDP found out that although sales at Dominion Stores had increased by only 13 per cent in the second quarter of 1973, compared with the second quarter of 1972, their profits increased by 93 per cent

"Even though their sales increased by only 13 per cent—and this is in the crucial period we've just talking about, June, July, August,—their profits increased from $1.48 million to $2 55 million," he said

If the prices review board was strengthened he said, such "excessive profits" would not be allowed

The second step of the plan would be for the government to subsidize production of the three basic food staples, fluid milk, bread and meat

Subsidies

"The government, and the people who live in the cities, must recognize the farmer's position," he said

One year they have a boom and the next year it's a bust The government must subsidize long-run essential food production, guarantee the farmer that he will always get a fair price and ensure that all Canadians will be able to buy these foods."

Other governments have subsidized essential food products to keep down the price, he said

If the government does subsidize the essentials and there is a market surplus, Broadbent said the government could buy up the domestic foods and use them in world exports. He said a number of commodity boards, not unlike the wheat board, would have to be set up to make the scheme workable

The third step involves a program Broadbent himself developed and had adopted by the recent NDP national convention

"The financing of housing should be taken out of the private sector of the economy," he said. "I'm not saying that builders should not make a profit but housing should be financed like our schools are, get the lowest achievable interest rate, not much higher than the rate of inflation'

Lower Interest Rates

To do so, he said the government would have to tell federally-chartered financial institutions to allocate a certain portion of their lending capital into housing each year. The NDP proposes that the interest rate be only 6 per cent. Mortgage interest rates are currently 9¾ per cent.

The attack on rising housing costs would also include land banking, which, although it would not begin to affect the price of land before two to five years, Broadbent said it should be undertaken immediately to begin to relieve the situation

"I doubt if the Liberals would lower the interest rates to six per cent because that would really take the financing out of the market and the Liberals are too committed to the market," he said "However, I can see them bringing down the interest rate. If they don't they'll be in political trouble, not only with Parliament, but with the people.'

Trudeau had indicated that he is agreeable to some of the NDP proposals, he said, and he personally thinks Parliament will be called back to deal with the policy implementation legislation by the middle of September

"The proposals are intended to do something now," he said. "They are entirely within the political realm of possibility. We took great care when we introduced them to look at the Liberal machine and see what they could do. We don't say our proposals will solve all the problems, we just want the Liberals to try them.'

Along with that, he said, the federal government should reverse its tax incentives so that the longer a person holds land for speculative purposes, the more taxes he would have to pay Municipalities, he said, should consider dong the same thing with land taxes

"I doubt if the Liberals would lower the interest rates to six per cent because that would really take the financing out of the market and the Liberals are too committed to the market"

Chairman MPP McIveen

Put the school back into community say MPP's

A report on the utilization of educational facilities is loaded and aimed right at the heads of the Ontario government

Prepared by seven Progressive Conservatives, two Liberals and two New Democrats, the interim report by the select Legislature committee chaired by Oshawa MPP Charlie McIveen makes a total of 25 recommendations, most of them innovative, critical and almost revolutionary

The committee refused to get into long definitions about what it was studying its says merely: "education is a life-long process...not confined to traditional education facilities"

Schools, it says in the report, are community facilities and to charge community groups to use them is "inappropriate". It recommends that the normal operating costs and community use of schools costs be incorporated and made eligible for provincial grants

The present approach to community use of schools is unsatisfactory because community access to those schools is limited, the report notes, and because the use of the schools for other than school activities is always left to the discretion of the school boards

"We consider that access to, and use of, schools as community facilities is the right of every person in the community and not just a privilege conferred at the will of a school board," the report says.

Such decisions must rest with the community in general and not with the schoolboard in particular, the report stresses

Specifically, the committee recommends that the education minister adopt the principle and amend the necessary legislation in order to reflect it

People power

To increase community involvement in the education process, the committee proposes that an elaborate network of "community action councils" be set up across the province under initial provincial direction Council members would work voluntarily and elect their own executive, but they themselves would not seek a position on the council through public or general elections. Anyone interested would have automatic membership

The committee recommends that a community through its community action council, should accept the responsibility for ensuring that all parts of the school are used in whatever ways are suitable to meet community needs and interests

"We have observed a hesitation on the part of many to become involved in the education process," the report notes. "This hesitation seems, far too often, to be encouraged by educational institutions. The formal schooling process, in particular, has tended to ignore the potential resources of the community."

Human resources

Teachers are not the only human resources for education, it says, and, by not using the skills and talents of the community at large outside the formal education process, the committee reports that the current education system has been "depriving school children"

The committee recommends that school boards use the community college-type teaching technique of utilizing not only trained teachers, but instructors chosen from the community's specialized fields who can pass on to students their knowledge gained from practical experience

"School boards," it says "should be able to employ for special tasks whomever a community feels can best serve its needs"

Catching up with the trends of women's liberation, the committee recommends that arts, sports and other recreational activities should be totally integrated into the schooling process and such activities should not be differentiated according to sex roles

Day care centres must be viewed as an educational experience for a child rather than just physical care, the report says. It recommends that the minister of community and social services institute a system of child and infant care which would be integrated with the development of early childhood education as a component of the education system in the province

Nothing, it seems, is sacrosanct to the committee

"We find little detailed information to show how effective the school library actually is in the schooling process," it says

The community does have a place in the school library, the committee notes and goes on to recommend that the community, through the community action council should accept the responsibility of deciding what kind of library is needed in the school and how it should operate

Needs ignored

The needs of the physically handicapped have "been totally ignored" in the design and planning of schools and education facilities, and the committee recommends that the government "should assure access for the physically handicapped to all community facilities" by adopting an amendment to the National Building Code

Added to that, the committee also recommends that the government provide special funds to pay for adapting all existing community facilities so they will meet the needs of the handicapped

The committee admits that, in its work, it has been far more concerned "with people and activities, programs and services than with bricks and mortar"

Clearly," the committe elaborates, "many members of the community gain much of their education in places quite separate and at times quite different from those set out in formal educational programs. We find the potential for education offered by libraries, theatres parks and even factories to be of equal importance to that promoted by schools and universities"

Purely arbitrary

Zeroing in on some of the causes of a lack of community involvement, the committee charges that school boards are "purely arbitrary" and doubts their ability to make arrangements for administering community use of schools "without prejudice"

It claims that when a community group does want to use schools, "the most important community facilities", it runs into "cumbersome procedures for obtaining school use...a lack of information, onerous rental fees...restrictions, and, the self-protective attitudes of school board officials and school personnel..."

On the whole, it says, the committee found that far too often the educational institutions seem only too ready to encourage a hesitation and find ways to prevent the community from becoming involved

"In our view, most government agencies that claim to accept community involvement and participation in decision-making have made only a token gesture," the committee observes

"Community involvement does not mean merely listening and then rejecting what is said By community involvement, we mean that each community has the power to influence the decision-making process through determination of its own needs and how those needs can best be served"

Outdoor meet to ask for public input

The first in a series of meetings to add public input into the proposed Oshawa Creek Plan will be held Tues., Sept. 11 at 8 p.m behind the McLaughlin Art Gallery if weather permits, or in the council chamber.

The thrust of the $1 million plan is to turn the Oshawa creek into a 130-acre, three-mile strip of recreational open space between Highway 401 and the Oshawa Golf Course

"The Oshawa Creek represents a hidden natural treasure in the heart of the Oshawa urban area," says a planning department draft "of the plan."...It can help meet some of the open space shortage, and also contribute a whole new dimension to the existing system of recreation areas and facilities."

Planners predict that the impressive park will stimulate the whole central Oshawa district

Calling for its completion by 1984, the plan will develop the area in a series of alternative phases

Besides the recreational facilities, a trail for hiking and cycling in the summer and a trail for skiing and snowshoeing in the winter is proposed

Access to such a trail from all major points of interest, such as schools and shopping centres, should be provided, the plan notes

Complete separation from vehicular traffic is achieved by providing bridges across the creek for pedestrians and cyclists and by underpasses under all vehicular bridges crossing the Oshawa Creek Valley, the plan says

Included in the recreation facilities will be passive facilities such as benches, picnic tables and playing facilities in seven sections. Also proposed for environmental facilities are ponds, landscaping, historical and other informational plaques for "quiet enjoyment"

Active recreation facilities include three double tennis courts that can be converted into ice rinks in winter, six play areas for children, a picnic area as well as existing facilities such as swimming pools ball diamonds, arena and stadium Wash and changing facilities as well as drinking water outlets are also proposed to serve these facilities

To implement the plan, approximately 14 acres of private land would have to be acquired along the creek. The plan says 18 properties are involved, although some of the acquisition would mean the city simply acquiring easements

"All property acquisition in the flood plain and most of those adjacent to it are eligible for the 50 per cent provincial grants through the Conservation Authority, ' the plan reports.

To get the provincial grants, the land would have to be turned over to the ConservationAuthority

"To obtain additional finances," the report suggests, "the city could also consider turning over to the Conservation Authority some of the valley land presently under city ownership, and receive a 50 per cent subsidy for these In this way more than $100,000 could be obtained."

Following public meetings there will be a formal public hearing before the draft is submitted to council for approval

Everything you have always wanted to know about cats ...but never dared ask

By Mary Margaret Allen

The cat, to me, is the most beautful animal that walks on this earth. I will also tell you that I find nothing wrong with dogs, birds, mice, snakes, etc., I just happen to like cats the best. At present I have two cats, both about eleven years old. My bedroom walls are literally covered in cats, wild and domestic. What is it that's so intriguing about these feline creatures? Could it be their graceful dancelike movements? Or their mysterious sexy eyes? Whatever it is, it's got me convinced that cats are great.

I'm not the only one who thinks this. The early Egyptians worshiped them like gods, often adorning them with earrings and amulets. When a cat or kitten died, he or she was mummified very neatly though not as elaborately as a human. Specially carved and painted coffins awaited the small body. The family of the deceased cat went into mourning, cutting off their hair -- often shaving their eyebrows and observed customary rites before another cat adopted the household. If someone was foolish enough to kill a cat, he soon lost his life to pay for his mistake. Literally hundreds of figurines in the shape of the cat have been discovered. Quite a few depict Bast – the cat goddess -- with her children. She had the head of a cat and a human body, her children however were full fledged cats.

Not all have treated the cat with so much respect. In the fifteenth century the cat was associated with the current trend of witchcraft. Black cats were the ones mainly involved – thus the present day superstition. It was supposed the cat was really the devil in disguise. It was not unusual to have the poor cat burned at the stake with his accused owner.

Today we seem to have rid ourselves of nonsense tales regarding the cat but there are millions who cannot stand the thought of even being near a cat. Most who dislike the cat do so because this animal refuses to do tricks like a dog. Some owners will argue the point with me, saying their "Fluffy" does many cute little stunts at the word of command. My reply to this is that the cat obviously wishes to do it or else he wouldn't. No one -- absolutely no one can force a cat to do something he doesn't want to. This feline is so independent so regal that you'd hardly dare suggest he "roll over".

I have witnessed several cats deliberately making a liar out of their unsuspecting masters. My cats make a point of doing this to me. If I say one won't eat bacon – he'll do it just to see me publicly embarassed.

People often classify the cat as cold or unaffectionate. I heartily disagree with this. The cat, when he wants attention will come and get it, even if it happens to be three in the morning.

The cat is one of the commonest animals, kept as pets or running wild. Man has always been awed by the mysterious qualities of him. The feline is extremely intelligent, almost human in it's thinking and emotions. The cat is loving, ferocious, tender, fastidious, and on and on go the list of adjectives to describe this creation. His gymnastic accomplishments make him envied by the athlete, there is such coordination and muscular control locked up in this small body. Combined with speed it enables the cat to wear the title of the best hunter. It has to be because people who get cats for mousing don't usually feed them, they have to fend for themselves.

Another thing about the cat is its concern for cleanliness. Since kittenhood they have been taught to wash. They don't have to be dirty they just do it to remain clean.

No matter how many arguments are brought up against the cat, I will always try to defend it if I'm there. These feline beasts have been down-graded by those who know them not. I suggest that before anyone opens their mouth to speak evel of a cat that he or she get one and watch it closely. Then and only then will all myths be finally destroyed.

Thoughts

By Valerie Bothwell

Goals and ideals inhibit all of us in some form or another. They infiltrate the minds of those dwelling high above in lofty towers to those of the most humblest abode. Perhaps a substitution for the clause commenting on the affluence of certain members of our society would be visiting their private, hobby farm.

Although goals and ideals may justify present actions and future plans, they sometimes give way in the face of failure to states of depression in even o the most normal human being.

Take for example the woman who plans, struggles and makes it to law school where she works twice as hard as her male counter-parts for acceptance. Later when applying for a position in a law office she is turned away. She is considered a risk by the law office. After all, she may marry, and worse yet, become pregnant with child. Have you ever seen a woman lawyer who is seven months pregnant defending a client in court? Well, Have you?

Of course, there is an instance where she definitely states her intentions at the present are not to marry; but she isn't at the top of the class. Wouldn't a male applicant with the same marks be more safe.

Unfortunately sex and job discrimination are hard to prove; guilty parties and corporations breath relief!

From here depression steps in. She wonders what is it all for ? Why did she go to law school instead of marrying Jack? All her friends from high school had married. Why couldn't she be the same? After all by now she would have had a family of three. Wouldn't that fill her day. She knows herself well. She realizes that is exactly what it would do 'fill her day'.

Now her depression goes deeper because she knows she wouldn't and doesn't want it. Perhaps she thinks sacrifice is necessary in one's life in order to appreciate where you are and why; but can a happy medium not be achieved?

She is confused. Once again depression has taken over as her goals and ideals fail in the face of the agressor.

Where in lies the answer? Do you simply give up or do you try harder? Do you give more or take more? Do you expect less or demand more?

Do you pretend it isn't there? If you acknowledge its presence pretending its minor, do you believe it will go away eventually? Do you ask questions? Q Or do you hand out ready-made prefabricated answers?

All of us are probing our minds and other's minds for the answers regarding these abstract concepts.

I admit I don't have the answers. Do you have them?

To 'dear public' - from Mary

By Mary Margaret Allen

The summer is coming to an end and with it the closing of our newspaper page company.

It has been a most unique experience--to say the least. At times I felt like smashing my typewriter against the wall and screaming at the top of my lungs. I decided no to because everyone else was and I do try to be different.

At times the public felt like smashing my head against the typewriter--trying to make me eat my own words, so to speak.

Then there were days when I got so blasted mad at everyone but tried not to show it--and that was hard.

And some days it looked more like a convention for the "War of the Roses" than a newspaper company.

In the long run the whole thing wasn't bad at all. We had our difficulties but who doesn't in business. All of us have gained some knowledge in one form or another. Putting in typewriter ribbons, dealing with the public, writing articles, laying out ads, beating off little old ladies and men, etc., are just a few of our varied accomplishments. And believe it or not ("This Week" will probably says not) my typing has improved tremendously.

But to sum up, I have learned

- That people, when they read an article will often take it as a personal insult, when the truth of the matter is we are only generalizing – with the omission of those necessary facts called statistics.
- Most people don't know who we are. When we went out to sell advertizing space, we were met with the reply, "Ontario who?"
- Good attendance is necessary for a company to be successful – our company wasn't really successful.
- Why businesswomen and businessmen get ulcers.
- What it's like to have to get up early and how it feels when the end of ththe workday comes-- at last, even though we worked only four hours daily.
- Business can be fun if you really work hard enough at it.
- Teenagers aren't as bad as most think. We can run a business if we are given a chance, some time and public support. O.Y.S.E. gave us the chance; The program manager gave us the time; a few business people gave us support. To all who helped us in any way I'd like to give my deepest thanks.

I hope if the newspaper company continues for more years in Oshawa that we have perhaps made the path a little less rocky. Since this was the first time for such a company it was rough sailing for us. I also hope that O.Y.S.E. gets more publicity in the future as the businesses were practically completely unaware of our existance. And as a last wish

I hope that all those nasty, blood-thirsty, ruthless hunters suffer from ingrown toenails.

Yours truly,
Mary the Mouth

Last words

Some learning bears its homage to trials, tribulations, and large ominous black printed textbooks. Some learning bears its homage to trials, tribulations, and daily endurance. The last type of learning is our source of experience.

Although our work is in fact, oblivious to some, it does nevertheless reach importance in our souls. Truly we strove to provide a valuable service to Oshawa and surrounding communities.

In advertising, failure was met time after time by eager sales staff. Several reasons were given as to why advertising space was not bought. But to those who supported us we are truly thankful. The situation could be analysed by professional businessmen trained in the area of sales to find the solution to the problems. The time and financial expense would deem this route madvisable.

The editorial department also had its problems. One of the most blatant, but somehow trifling problem was the one of obtaining photographs to compliment the editorial content. All-in-all the Editor of "This Week" must have suffered spastic outbursts of violent words upon reading the material. Perhaps even the public suffered a similar type of response.

Overall I experienced working this summer in a way that I had never done before. Total involvement was new to me as was interest in a summer job.

On spending the education dollar

By Ron Taylor

Another school term is about to start and thoughts move rapidly ahead to the coming year. If we are lucky, the teachers will have their differences with the school board settled, and our days will be well organized by teachers not only interested in passing on their knowledge to us, but also the extra curricular subjects we enjoy.

At one time in history school-marms and masters may have had as much as a grade six or eight education. Some not even that much. They faithfully taught the three "R's" to as many as eight classes at a time. They also had to live in with a reputable family and their liesure time was organized by tthe community. Pay was very small.

Today we have a very different picture. Teachers belong to a union. If their demands are not met, we the students must suffer. Work-to-rule often elicits an answer to a question of, "If you want to know, look it up." Great if you have a set of books at your disposal, but one can't always leave classes to go to the library to look up the answer.

If there is any field where cutting down is necessary, it is and should not be the field of education. In our learning time from six years old to grade thirteen or as far as we may want to go, we are entitled to the very best teachers we can get, in every classroom in every school all across the country. Education is the most precious commodity of all.

Police enforce laws for cyclists' good

Remember when you were a child and you used to get a spanking "for your own good"?

Well, that's basically the same approach the Oshawa Police Department's safety bureau takes, but without the corporal punishment

Since school ended last June there have been 15 bicycle accidents involving cars and bikes.The people driving those bikes were mostly children ranging in age from 6 to 15. There was even one 39-year-old man

In 14 of the 15 accidents, the cyclist was at fault, according to police statistics

A sampling of the accidents show the causes to be such things as driving at night without having a light on the bike; crossing the street without regard to oncoming traffic; and, a left turn across three lanes of traffic, again, without regard to traffic

To combat the situation, the police have been stopping cyclist traffic violators. If they are under 16 years of age, they are taken home to their parents who are told by the police officer why the child was stopped

Warning

The parents and the child are then warned that if the child is stopped one more time by any other constable for any other traffic violation, both parents and child will have to appear in juvenile court facing a charge under the Highway Traffic Act. In most cases, they are told, the whole thing will result in a fine

If the cyclist who is stopped is over 16, however, he is immediately issued a standard traffic violation ticket

In the past two months since school has ended, police have stopped and warned more than 125 traffic violators Since then, it is getting a little bit more difficult for police to find violators and so, they conclude, their attack must be working

To prove the point, safety bureau head Constable Tom Homes took a This Week staffer on a routine patrol of the city looking for cyclists who were not obeying the law, or not observing practical safety rules

During the first hour of the patrol, Homes and our reporter, although coming upon approximately 100 cyclists, were unable to spot anyone violating the law or safety rules

Then, after about 1½ hours of cruising around they spotted an 8-year-old boy riding a bike twice his size. The boy was driving without being able to reach the seat. He was weaving from the curb, and twice he lost control of the bike as he slipped from the pedals

Constable Homes stopped him and asked where he lived. The boy was told to go home and Homes said he would talk to his parents

Mother appreciative

His mother, courteous and excited when Homes talked to her, said the boy had a bike that was the right size for him and that he had taken the larger bike without her permission or knowledge. She said it would not happen again and that she appreciated Homes bringing the matter to her attention

That was in the northeast section of the city

About 20 minutes later in the northwest part of the city, Homes spotted a 12-year-old boy riding down the wrong side of the street

When stopped, the boy admitted that he knew it was against the law to do so. The same procedure followed. The boy was taken home and the situation was explained to his parents

Homes took down the boy's name and address and said it would be on file at the police station and if he was ever caught it would be on file at the police station and if he was ever caught violating traffic laws again, he would have to go to court

The next time he spotted someone, this time in the southwest section of the city about 20 minutes later, Homes was more lenient He spotted a boy cyclist riding down the wrong side of the road again Traffic conditions were such that he could not conveniently stop his car. He put on the loud speaker and to the boy to get over to the right side of the road

A little scare

That was enough. It scared the kid a little He scurried to the other side of the street

In most cases, says Homes, cyclists don't really know they are breaking the law, because the parents haven't taught their children the proper rules of the road

Accidents are caused in part, he says, because some motorists become impatient with cyclists "and they know they're not going to get hurt if they get into an accident"

Here are some tips and recommendations that Homes says should be observed not only by motorists and cyclists, but by parents as well:

A bike is considered the same as a motor vehicle and is subject to the same laws. There are 24 sections under the HTA, as well as city bylaws, that cover bikes Always have the proper lighting on your bike, in daytime and nighttime, and know the proper hand signals

At a busy intersection, a cyclist should get off his bike and walk it across the street at a proper crosswalk or stop light

Don't weave back and forth on the road. By doing so, a cyclist could be charged under the HTA for careless driving

Before you change lanes or make a turn, make sure it can be done safely

Before you open the door of your car if you are parked along a curb, make sure there are no cyclists behind you. A motorist who does not could be charged with opening his door in the face of oncoming traffic

When overtaking a cyclist, motorists should drive just a bit slower and be ready for anything

All bikes should have a licence, a horn or bell Bikes are not allowed to be driven on the sidewalks

Police recommend that children under age 9 not be allowed to take their bikes to or from school

Oshawa firefighter Fred Gabourie hangs on to Billy McClennen as the 10-year-old presents a plastic bag full of $22 worth of pennies, nickels and dimes to firefighter Andy Lion. Billy and his seven-year-old sister Kelly, also perched high on the fire engine, along with the rest of their Susan Court gang watching from street level organized a carnival to raise money to aid research into Muscular dystrophy.

Holiday Inn waitress Barb Swerfiger serves assistant hotel manager Gary Robinson the three course meal of the future if writer Stephen Leacock's prediction of future eating habits comes true.

Help! before going the route of Leacock's pill

Some experts are predicting that our children or our children's children won't even miss the exquisite joy of savoring a barbequed steak straight off the steer, the traditional Christmas turkey with all the trimmings, the flavor sensations of exotic paella, or even a pork chop

The food shortage today and the unbelievabley high prices will eventually lead to a mainly vegetarian society that sounds very stoical. By force of necessity, people will get used to eating only amounts and types of food that their bodies require as fuel. Eating won't be a pleasure, it will simply be a necessity, like breathing

by linda sutton

Odious predictions, but no doubt with a substantial measure of reality

As it is now, the world's food supply is badly distributed. While we in Canada are complaining about the price of steak - yet still forking over two bucks a pound for our Saturday night dinner - there is famine in Africa, India and other poorer, overpopulated regions of the world

While we sit in comfort paying our farmers not to farm, others are crying with distended bellies. While we throw our leftovers in the garbage, maybe with a guilty joke, others could grow fat and healthy on the equivalent of what we discard.

People are dying and we're not even losing weight

That all sounds pretty righteous, but I'm just as selfish about my food as the next Canadian. I like eating, and I love cooking. And I know it's costing me $10 more a week now to feed my family than it did a year ago

And that hurts

The obvious way to solve the problem is to start eating less of everything. But that is too much of a sacrifice. And we working wives are probably hardest hit. Because we don't have the time to simmer stews and make soups, we have to buy more expensive cuts of meat or serve hamburger all the time.

What I'm looking for in this column is help, advice from the professional homemaker as to how to cut corners while still serving flavorful and nutritious meals. Any letters with ideas about penny-saving shopping techniques or budget-stretching recipes would be appreciated and printed. After all, we can't all buy freezers and buy a side of beef or pork to last us through the winter. And we all haven't had the time or inclination to grow our own vegetables this year

We want to eat as well as we can this generation anyway until the day arrives when we have to practice solyent Green or until Stephen Leacock's prediction of families Christmas feasting on a pill in 'The Newfood' (from Literary Lapses) comes true.

The Carlton Show Band is to be the feature entertainment at the Oshawa Chamber of Commerce Autofest Ball September 22 at the Civic Auditorium.

Carlton Show Band highlight of Autofest Ball

If the luck of the Irish has anything to do with it, the Grand Prix Ball should be one of the highlights of Autofest 73

Of course, that will all depend on the Irish antics of the entertaining headliners of the ball, the Carlton Show Band, renowned for appearances on the television show, Pig and Whistle

Sponsored by the Oshawa Chamber of Commerce, the ball will be held at the Civic Auditorium Sat., Sept 22 between 9 p m. and 1 a m

Table reservation and dance floor admission will be $5 per person, while tickets for the seating section only will cost $3 per person

The band's music is acclaimed by critics as a mixture of raucous rollicking tunes and pure blarney served up by six honest-to-goodness "paddies" and two "pretenders" from Nova Scotia

"The band," says the critic, "gives full value for the entertainment dollar During the two hours on stage there is no waste motion, no slackening of pace, just one tune after another --- Irish, sacred, country, contemporary, comedy -- with everybody pitching in

Tickets can be reserved by phoning the Oshawa Chamber at 728-1683 Chamber Manager Al Reed warns that tickets are selling fast and he advises they be reserved early

Bar facilities , by the way, will be available during the ball

Ron Abram, 449 Christine Crescent, Oshawa, took second prize at the CNE national frisbee contest in the competition for accuracy. Twelve-year-old Ron is a grade six student at Gertrude Colpus.

Oshawa Catholic High still looking for equality in funding

Having to pay tuition has not lessened the projected enrollment this year of more than 650 students at the Oshawa Catholic High School

Although trustees of the separate school system have again this year made requests to the provincial government that it consider equalizing the grant structure at least at the grade nine and ten levels, the system must still operate on elementary grants rather than secondary grants as other high schools do

"This is what we would first ask for," says Sister Conrad, principal of the Oshawa Catholic High School "Then we would request continual grants as far as grade 12."

After grade 10, Catholic secondary students are in the position of having to pay a tuition fee of $250 that doesn't cover the total cost, so funds have to be found elsewhere to subsidize the school

"This throws the burden on the parent who must pay both taxes and tuition," says Sister Conrad. "A high percentage of students, though, pay their own tuition by working during the summer and the remaining funds have to be supplied by the religious community with some help from the parishes

She says at the present time, the government has refused to increase the grade nine and ten grants and also has refused to grant extensions

I think the government is of the opinion, as are many people, that it is too costly to support two systems," she says "Also it would mean a lot of schools calling themselves private would apply for grants. We don't consider ourselves a private school in that sense because anyone is eligible to attend It really is a public separate system with the same academic subjects as other collegiates."

From the first year a student enters a Catholic secondary school to his fifth year, he studies the courses in religious knowledge, but, because of the lack of grants, is not able to take any shops

As for the purpose of religion in the school, Sister Conrad says the school tries to give a broad centered education so that God is not ommitted from any facet of the curriculum

"We do have formal religion in the classes in which we teach the principles of the gospel and Christ with an awareness of our responsibility as Christians," she says

In terms of credits received for the religious instruction, she says the student earns about half a credit per course Courses are adapted to the level of maturity of the students and the curriculum outline for each grade

The fact that the students live and learn together in a community of professed Christians is more the idea that we have the freedom to make this expression; whereas, the other schools have a diversity of specific religious principles," she says "Basically, the parent has the right to educate his child as he wants to in the fullness of his being and since he considers that education is not only the training of the initial development of the human being and the building of social skills, but that man was created by God and is destined to be with God, then, in his education, the spiritual dimension of man is a part that should be considered

Sister Conrad says that perhaps the freedom of thought and the freedom to choose in our society has caused some of the students to question traditional religion

"They may have questions and challenge the ideas taught to them, but those who are receptive to them do so with maturity and considered judgement rather than just a simple acceptance," she says "This would presumably make their belief more meaningful because the student has challenged it."

Parent volunteers give one-to-one help

By Jane Milne
Staff Writer

Eight-year-old Billy has just returned home this summer after two years of institutionalized care for emotional and learning disabilities

Now, this September, Billy will enter public school for the first time He is naturally anxious about this transition as are his parents who want their little boy to become part of the regular school system and develop to his full potential

Such a transition however, would not be possible or at least would have little chance for success if it were not for the School Volunteers Project

Made up of interested volunteers within Ontario County, and sponsored by the University Women's Club, housewives and even retired teachers offer their time to work with children such as Billy while the teacher of his class carries on the regular schoolroom routine

"We receive requests for volunteers from the special education consultants of the Ontario School Board,' says Mary Murdoch past chairman of the project "We then contact women in the community, usually by word of mouth, who would like to offer their time as a volunteer in a school."

The volunteers need not be members of the University Women's Club or for that matter, be university graduates. All that is required is their time and their interest in helping a child with learning or emotional problems.

"Last year we placed more than 40 volunteers in schools throughout the county," says Mrs. Murdoch. "They helped teachers with kindergarten and grade one classes, worked on a one-to-one basis with a child needing special help or took over the class while the teacher gave the needed attention to an individual child

"Often a child just needs that extra bit of special attention in getting him started," she says. "This can be in reading for example, or just in talking to him "

Mrs Murdoch says the volunteers are asked to give one or two mornings or afternoons of their time to the project each week Once the volunteers become involved, they are very enthusiastic and are glad to give of their time, she says

"I was worried when I first became involved in the project that the volunteers were perhaps taking jobs away from teachers," she says, "but with the cut backs in education, I realized that these children would not have the extra help if not for the volunteers."

The teacher or principal of a school will contact the speical education consultant when the need for volunteers arises. The consultant will in turn contact the volunteer project for the name of a suitable volunteer

"The volunteer will be taken to the school and introduced to the teacher and child," says Mrs. Murdoch The background of the volunteer and the needs of the child will then be discussed

Last year the program had one male volunteer who worked very successfully with a student at General Vanier Vocational Institute and some of the women volunteers taught girls at Glenholme basic sewing and grooming

The program will be starting again this fall with the new school year and anyone interested in volunteering can contact Chairman Margaret Couch at 576-1778

Love of cars in Autofest car show

Oh Lord, won't You buy me a Mercedes Benz
My friends all drive Porsches
I must make amends
Worked hard all my lifetime
With no help from my friends
So, oh Lord, won't You buy me a Mercedes Benz.

Janis Joplin perhaps epitomized the love North Americans have for the automobile in her song of "great social and political import "

Perpetuating this love with exhibits of antique MG's, full race cars and even a Ferrari, the second annual Oshawa Autofest Car Show is underway

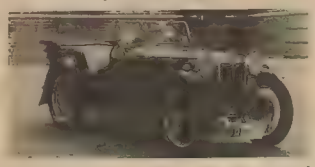
Sponsored by Shell Oil Canada, the show will be held from 6 p.m. to 11 p.m on September 19 from 1 p.m. to 11 p.m. on September 20 at the Oshawa Civic Auditorium.

The longest running single event of Autofest, the car show has to date 29 cars of varying interest for the public to view along with entertainment featuring Heintzman organs and a barber shop group

A licensed lounge will be available while slides of memorable races are shown and display booths, which are not limited to those in the automotive industry alone, will also add to the variety of the show

This year's show promises to be bigger and above all, different, than was last year's successful first run

These two antique MGs - the 1936 version above and the 1934 model below - will be on display at the Autofest car show to be held at the Civic Auditorium September 19 and 20.



Black Creek Village holds festival

Food!

That's just one of the tantalizing attractions that will be a crowd-drawer at the Pioneer Festival at Black Creek Pioneer Village slated for Sat., Sept 22.

Some of the cooking planned includes tangy homemade sausage, sauerkraut, apple cider, cheese and a lot more

Demonstrations, ranging from broom-making to candle moulding, are just some of the things visitors will witness

Festival hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and admission is $1.75 for adults, 50 cents for students and children and a maximum family admission of $4.

OSHAWA PLANNING BOARD
NOTICE OF PUBLIC MEETING
RE MCLAUGHLIN SQUARE PROJECT

A proposal has been submitted by McLaughlin Square Inc. and Tobercurry Investments Ltd. to the City of Oshawa for the redevelopment of the block bounded by William Street East, Mary Street, Richmond Street East, and Ontario Street. The proposal contains one apartment tower of 26 floors (350 units of which 100 would be for Senior Citizens), one apartment tower of 22 floors (168 units), and an office or hotel tower of 19 floors (197,000 square feet)

Since this proposal requires changes in the Official Plan and the Zoning By-law of the City of Oshawa, Planning Board has the responsibility of evaluating the proposal and making a recommendation to City Council. The proposed development would have a considerable economic and physical impact on the downtown and adjacent residential areas and it is the desire of Planning Board to incorporate the opinions of citizens and businessmen, both in the affected area and the entire City, into its considerations, as much as possible Therefore, a public meeting of the Planning Board will be held on Wednesday, September 5, 1973, 7.00 o'clock p.m

in the Council Chambers, City Hall, Oshawa, Ontario

for the purpose of explaining the proposal and providing information to all interested individuals and groups

At the conclusion of the public meeting, written comments or briefs on the McLaughlin Square Project will be invited from all interested parties. Such submissions are to be sent to the Secretary, Oshawa Planning Board, City Hall, 50 Centre Street South, Oshawa, Ontario, on or before September 19, 1973

A public hearing of Planning Board will be subsequently held on Wednesday, September 26, 1973

7:00 o'clock p.m
in the Council Chambers, City Hall, Oshawa, Ontario

at which hearing all interested parties, either in person or by solicitor or agent, will be provided with the opportunity of presenting their views on the subject proposed development or making verbal presentations on written submissions

Information pertaining to the McLaughlin Square Project will be on display during regular office hours (8.30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.) in the office of the Planning Division, Department of Planning and Development, 7th Floor, Rundle Tower, City Hall, Oshawa, Ontario

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING
1973 DRAFT FOR OFFICIAL PLAN FOR THE OSHAWA PLANNING AREA

The 1973 Draft Official Plan for the Oshawa Planning Area was presented at a public meeting of the Oshawa Planning Board on August 8th, 1973 and preliminary comments on the plan were presented by various individuals at a public hearing held August 15th, 1973.

Written comments or briefs on the 1973 Draft Official Plan are invited by the Oshawa Planning Board from all interested individuals and groups, in order that they may be effectively considered by Planning Board prior to making a recommendation to City Council. Such submissions are to be sent to the Secretary, Oshawa Planning Board, City Hall, 50 Centre Street South, Oshawa, Ontario on or before August 31st, 1973.

All interested parties are further invited to attend, either in person or by solicitor or agent, a public hearing of the Oshawa Planning Board on September 6th, 1973, 7:00 p.m. in the Council Chambers, City Hall, Oshawa, at which hearing the Planning Board will hear verbal persentations on the written submissions.

All material relevant to the 1973 Draft Official Plan is open for public inspection during regular office hours (8:30 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.) in the office of the Planning Division, Department of Planning and Development, 7th Floor, Rundle Tower, City Hall, Oshawa, Ontario.

Steel belted radial The proven radial

The tire that beat the world's toughest roads. Here's how — Proven craftsmanship . . . after 25 years of manufacturing experience. It's so good we guarantee it for 40,000 miles Proven on test track . . . steel belted radials offer greater resistance to punctures and cuts; sure, safe stops; much safter cornering because the tread stays flat while sidewalls 'give'; for cooler running for sustained safety; and far more mileage than any other tires.

Proven on tough terrain . . . A 3,758-mile race, from Nairobi through Tasmania and back again. A rugged test for any set of tires! And a car that ran on Sears belted radial tires finished first in its class. Again, running from Ensenada to La Paz on the Mexican Bala Peninsula cars with Sears radial tires broke all records—were placed first in 3 different classes. The same tire that Sears sells for cars like yours!

The Mounties

From pipe to pipe—peace to hash

From peace pipes to hash pipes, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police has seen many changes in Canadian society in its 100 years of service

"We would hope our force is projecting with and keeping up with the changes in society," says Sergeant P.K. Booker of the Oshawa detachment of the RCMP "I was raised in the west where the force has always had a good working image but we are not as well known in the central part of the country."

For this reason, as well as in celebration of their centenary, the Oshawa detachment will hold open house from their offices on the fifth floor of Rundle Tower during the first week of September

Modular displays illustrating the first 100 years of RCMP history will be shown to visitors on Sept. 4, 5, and 6 from 8:15 a.m to 4:30 p.m. September will also mark the first anniversary of the detachment in Oshawa

Booker says he and his men like to talk to people and help them and that the purpose of the open house is to invite the public both children and adults to visit them

"This is a public office where we receive a tremendous amount of calls from people looking for advice he says One man even phoned us once saying that his dentist refused to supply him with his x-ray negatives of his teeth

The Oshawa setup

The Oshawa RCMP detachment has a sergeant in charge (Booker) two corporals and there are eight constables

Attached to this detachment are also two members of the Ontario Provincial Police who work with our drug people says Booker Within the last year, the OPP have become directly involved in drug investigations which helps to give us unified enforcement We also have one man working with us from the Oshawa Police Department

Aside from the five men unified drug enforcement unit he says the custom and exise unit works in areas of illicit alcohol manufacture and distribution as well as any contraband smuggled from or into the United States

"Stills are still very much in evidence today," says Booker "In the 1960's in Toronto, we would find illicit alcohol being sold at $25 a gallon. It is still a problem today when you think of the cost of liquor

The remaining three men of the detachment make up the general investigation section which may cover areas such as income tax, water safety, and parole

As the enforcement branch of the federal government, such a department as immigration for example, may contact one of the country's many RCMP detachments to investigate a case of illegal entry

"We also work in things like the inquiries for the Canadian Bravery Regulations," he says. "These regulations are set up to recognize the value of action taken on the part of an individual at his or her own peril to save a life. We would be assigned to get the facts in a case like this for example, and then someone in Ottawa would make the decision

Not all horsemen

During the past 100 years the Mounted Police have changed as have the people they serve Recruits which number 1,000 a year, are no longer required to learn to ride and are involved in many new programs featuring aviation and advanced technological equipment, depending on the area they serve

Many people still think of the Mounties as being stationed only in Ottawa," says Booker. "When I was stationed in Niagara Falls, there was a man who had lived there for 30 years who had no idea the Mounties had a detachment there."

"We at this detachment, like to think of our job as covering not just Oshawa, but roughly the same area as the new region of Durham," he says. "We cover from Port Union Road East, north up to and including the Townships of Scott and Uxbridge, east to Bethany and south again to Lake Ontario, west of Port Hope

Often, he says, Mounties in the west are compared with the municipal traffic police because they take over the duties of provincial and municipal police in remote areas even though they are still a federal force

"People don't see this in Ontario and Quebec," he says. "Of course in the north, the RCMP is the only law enforcement agency They even distribute mail in some parts of the north

In working with the native people of Canada, the RCMP have also been involved in new programs.

"We have a program now attempting to get the police forces for the reserves composed of Indians, says Booker One reserve in Quebec has developed a training course and has trained a number of Indians and they now operate as special constables policing the reserve. I understand they are very effective and that this idea is spreading."

Organization

The effectiveness of the RCMP, particularly in the west is seen by Booker to be because of organization

The semi military police force with its headquarters and subdivisions has been organized from day one," he says. "We have a tremendous training program which we encourage our men to keep up with"

The RCMP has received a certain amount of criticism in its 100 year history which Booker says he is aware of "Our organization is made up of rules and regulations and human beings. It can run afoul and make mistakes," he says.

Being a Mounties is just like any other job. It's what you make of it. If you give it a fair shake it will give you a fair shake

Looking stern and military, officers of the Oshawa detachment of the RCMP pose in uniforms significant of their past performance in the service of Canada. Constable Kevin Payne models the modern mountie uniform. In the pith-helmeted costume of 1888 is Constable Fred Gallop. The distinguishing feature of the original Northwest Police uniform, worn by Constable Ross Black, is the pert pillbox hat.

School psychologist wants to help all students, not just the 'deviant' 5 percent

The five percent of school children who are called 'deviant' won't be the only concern of psychologist Dr Barry Jackson

Jackson, who began work as the staff psychologist of the Ontario County Board of Education July 1 believes that a psychologist has to demonstrate that he can be of value to the school system

He also feels that the 95 percent of school children who are performing satisfactorily can be helped to perform better

Jackson wants to avoid the trap of spending all of his time meeting the crises that develop and plans instead to act as a consultant for classroom teachers with problems

A deviant child is defined as one who inconveniences the classroom or the teacher Often he says the situation is one of conflict between a child and a teacher A different teacher may have no problem at all with that child he says

Of course Jackson stresses there are children who do have real problems hyperactivity high distractibility and so on

Classroom setting

The psychologist is emphatic that almost all problem children can and should be treated within the classroom setting

If a teacher contacted him about such a child he or one of his assistants would sit in on the class then they would in collaboration with the teacher decide how best to handle the situation

It is unlikely that the child would be taken out of the classroom situation, he says

His past experience has shown him that frequently the problem observed in the classroom is not evident outside the classroom so the problem is most effectively treated on the spot

School psychologist Dr. Barry Jackson

However, he does see a possibility of group sessions with high school students, especially those who need instruction in how to improve their study methods

A major ambition of Dr Jackson is to introduce psychology into the high school curriculum as a full credit subject

A great many students are getting by, achieving passing marks and creating no special problems in class. However, he says, many of them aren't functioning to their full potential for a variety of reasons

Practical course

The course he envisages would be a very practical one he says It would teach better study methods, decisionmaking, how to be a good productive member of the system, how to be happier

"This would be an attempt to teach the student adjustment skills instead of just academics," he says

"It is amazing how poorly equipped we are to make decisions," he notes, adding that the course would give the students methods by which to control anxiety levels, improve inter-personal relations, become a better parent

Jackson has already applied for a number of grants to fund the experimental program and says that if it goes through the students taking the course will be carefully monitored to determine if they benefit from it in the long run

'So much is left to chance in allowing people to learn to be happy. The course would not dictate how people should be happy,' he says 'but it would give students ways of running their lives in pursuit of more contentment and happiness

Communication would be an important ingredient in the course. Often, he notes, students who achieve high levels of communication lose some of this ability by the time they have gone through the school system And he says the teachers who communicate best with their classes have the highest morale and the greatest productivity

Taking responsibility

The course would be a practical one, concentrating on student participation in actual problem-solving

'Most of us intellectually know how we should be running our lives but we don't always practise what we know'

In mental health, says Jackson a person is happier if he takes responsibility for running his own life and making his own decisions One of the important constraints, however, is not to infringe on another's rights

The school psychologist emphasizes that his role will not be one of test-giver Any testing that is done here, he says is not very extensive and will be done only after the psychologist has satisfied himself that it will help in understanding the student

Jackson's department will work very closely with the Oshawa Mental Health Clinic and with the mental health clinic at the Whitby Psychiatric Hospital, especially if the student's problem involves other members of his family

Says licensing board chairman:

The public wants the liquor laws it has

TORONTO – Liquor licensing laws may not be perfect but then you can't please everybody says James Mackay chairman of the Ontario Liquor Licence Board

Mackay, former Toronto police chief and now in his third year as board chairman says he's a firm advocate of the existing liquor laws in Ontario and, although they are criticized at times he says they're there to benefit both the public and the licenced establishment

He's quick to clarify that the board itself does not make the laws but is usually asked to comment on proposed changes in the law or on new laws, and in some cases to recommend changes

The job of establishing liquor laws falls on the shoulders of the government he says, with the liquor licence board acting as the licensing body to ensure the letter of the law is followed

He says there are a number of proposed changes to the liquor laws now being considered some of which will be recommended while others not, but at the present time he's not in a position to make these public

Although many may not have taken notice, he says there have been a few major changes in the liquor laws these dealing mainly with granting licenses to universities, messes and recreational facilities

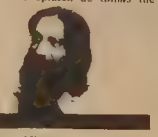
Whatever the laws are Mackay says he thinks they are not ridiculous imposing regulations but rather, are reasonable" requests

Licensed establishments aren't the only ones to complain about the laws he says In many cases, the complaints come from the public itself, and whatever action the board decides to take is done with sound reasons he says

One of the most common complaints he says, has come from various types of clubs wanting to be licensed in what is usually referred to as a "dry area"

This has been given a great deal of consideration by the board, says Mackay and as of this fall it will all

by john bell



be changed to allow these people to obtain licenses

Another problem was with organizations wanting to get a liquor permit and then advertise to draw in the people. The board has not arrive at any decision on this point, but Mackay says the matter is being studied in depth

The problem with allowing one individual or organization to do something like this he says, is that it automatically sets a precedent for any other individual or group throughout the province

The whole thing settles on whether or not the law is sensible he says, and in his opinion he thinks the public reacts that way and considers the laws sensible

When the Durham regional government comes into effect on January 1 1974 and a regional parks system is set up, the special bill creating the region allows for those parks to be licensed under the terms of the liquor act by the regional council

This says Mackay is not exactly the case.

Liquor permits for parks are usually issued only if the occasion involves the total community he says, in which case the board can issue a special occasion permit which is only good for a limited time

In the case of licensing regional parks, he says there is a definite procedure which must be followed with the application then having to be approved by the board

Comments must be acquired from such bodies as the police, board of health and the parks commission he says, before an application for a permit is considered

As to allowing drinking on Sundays in licensed establishments without having to buy a meal, Mackay says he doesn't think either the public or the establishments want that

The policing arm of the board are the liquor inspectors, which according to Mackay, generally get along very well with most hotel and licensed establishment people

These inspectors, he says are not there to push their authority or to threaten the proprietor with withdrawing his licence if he commits an offence under the liquor act

In fact, he says owners are given every chance to hold onto their licence just as they are to acquire it

To get a liquor licence the applicant must prove to the board that he is experienced in the restaurant or hotel field. The more experience he's had, the easier it is for him to get his licence, says Mackay

The board, he says, does not discriminate against the small businessman in favor of the large chain operators

The laws regarding liquor generally reflect the wishes of the people, he says, and to some extent 'the public is acting as its own watchdog

FACTS YOU SHOULD KNOW ABOUT MOVING with COLEMAN'S

An example of the estimated cost of moving 5000 lbs. of household goods 145 miles. The rate would be $7.74 per hundred pounds. A freezer included in shipment weighing approx. 300 lbs. would cost approx. $23.22. You can now evaluate whether you could replace the freezer at destination for $23 00 plus what you could sell it for. We're sure you will find it more reasonable to ship.

School psychologist wants to help all

"I'm good at it"

Mona loves her work-shoplifting

By Brian Evans

EDITOR'S NOTE: Shoplifting, say stores and police, is becoming increasingly frequent and costly to the average, honest shopper. It appears every one is doing it — kids, adults, and the pros. Even the supermarkets are being hit in these days of escalating food prices. Stores have taken to hidden cameras, in-store detectives, mirrors and inspectors at the front doors to protect themselves. Yet shoplifters still get away with millions of dollars of items every year in a way it's a social problem. Some shoplifters steal from stores to get back at society and big business. Others, like the professional shoplifter interviewed in the article below by Brian Evans, think of it as a job, a source of revenue to be counted on. Mona (the name is fictitious, but the story's very real) has been highly successful at her work and it's obvious she enjoys it. Here's her story.

Mona doesn't carry a large purse because it is in style but because it is necessary in her line of work

She is a professional shoplifter

"I've been boosting for about five years," says the 26-year-old Oshawa housewife. "I've only been caught once about four years ago. It was a real joke"

Only one of the other six people she works with stealing from area department and grocery stores has been caught, receiving as she did, a suspended sentence

"We just sit around and joke about it

Mona claims that she and her co-workers made $200,000 last year from stores in the Bowmanville to Scarborough vicinity and that the part-time job is "satisfying"

We work three to four hours a week between the hours of 10 a.m. and 2 p.m which are ideal hours with women coming and going and the store is still not set up yet," she says. "We hit an average of five stores a day"

She says the ability of the operation to succeed is that they know the security people in the stores to watch for and that they watch out for each other

With no special equipment to conceal the merchandize she steals, except her large purse, Mona says that she simply walks into a store, followed at a discreet distance by her "friends", to the general area of the store they plan to "hit".

"The others with me watch any people who may be watching me," she says. "It's a perfect operation. You haven't committed any crime until you walk out of the store"

She says she can sense if there will be touble and if necessary, she'll just drop her purse and leave it there

"I have had the odd person come up to me and ask what I think I'm doing but all I do then is go into the hysterical act and they disappear. There's nothing they can do

"We can average between $600 to $1,000 a day and we can always find a good market," she says "People will buy anything that's cheap."

The kind of items which she says she sells most of include small household appliances, clothes, car stereos and tapes and jewelry

"I don't need a fence (a person who does the actual selling of stolen goods) because people with money are glad to get a third off so they don't care if it's stolen

"There are even a couple of cops who buy things regularly for their home," says Mona "They are good friends of a couple of boy friends of mine"

She says that she never works during Christmas because of all the amateurs shoplifting in the stores

"It's just too risky for a professional like me when all these speed freaks and kids from school are doing it," she says

The often seasonal and part-time income doesn't really worry her though because she says she makes $250 a week minimum and has made up to $1,050 in one week

Mona says she never keeps any stolen goods in her home in case the police ever did investigate and tries to sell the goods as soon as possible

With the income from her stealing, she says she is able to dress her daughter well, eat well and take vacations to Florida and the Bahamas

"I was on welfare and mother's allowance but we damned near starved to death," she says. "My boyfriend got a job in a service station and we've got a bit of money in the bank which we are saving for a down payment on a house. My stealing has become just an income to us."

The money she makes doesn't go for drugs although she says people may think that is the reason for her stealing.

"Some guys like digging ditches. I like to steal because I'm good at it," says Mona

When asked if she fears being caught she says: "I'd just be more careful but it wouldn't stop me. The police work eight hours a day trying to catch me and I work 24 hours a day at not being caught."

Although she says she draws the line at stealing from peoples' homes and that kleptomania does not enter into it, she says, "I'm happy, satisfied and I love it"

HOLIDAY WEEKEND WITHOUT BUDGET PANGS

Enjoy good food this holiday weekend But put on the extra care to prepare stirring your overworked budget

Take time to think out menus and a shopping list that emphasizes low cost inexpensive fruits and vegetables and make substitutes for expensive meats and fish for meat can't be beaten as a cottage main course.

For grilling consider such things as meatball kebobs barbecued bologna chunks and grilled fish sticks brushed with barbecue sauce Or put flat burgers or steakettes together in pairs with blue cheese and butter mushrooms thin onion and tomato slices dill pickle mashed chili beans or mustard relish between Grill up between toasted bun halves and offer a choice of condiments You can even treat hamburgers to Steak au Poivre style

Depend on protein extending casseroles or meat pies for cottage dinners Make them a day ahead lamp them and take them to the cottage in your cooler

And remember that at this season such home-grown fruits and vegetables as peaches, plums, corn, tomatoes, lettuce, celery and melons need no expensive dress up treatment They're wonderful just as they are

Ding dong, it's your Avon man

Male libber Cowsill finds no battle

by garnet cowsill

Sex.

Many people—especially men—have recently come under a lot of fire from advocates of the Women's Liberation Movement for distinguishing between the two genders that make up that three letter word.

A lot of women, and even some men, want to ensure that women are treated as men's equals. They want to be able to have the same social standing, the same jobs, the same respect, the same wages, and the same lack of prejudices that are offered to men in today's society.

In other words, they want the same rights as men, and justly so. But, while all this is going on, and while the governments continue to investigate whether women are being treated fairly, what's happened to men's rights?

Some of the male staff of This Week get together and wondered who was taking care of men's rights. We wondered if a man applied for a job which would normally be geared for a woman, if he would get it or not.

Being the hard-core male chauvinist that my editor knows me to be I of course was assigned to investigate the situation. I was to pose as an unemployed Joe-average. I was told to apply for certain jobs and see if I was discriminated against because of my sex.

Quite candidly, I figured we had these women libbies now. I was sure if I applied for a job usually done by a women I would be turned down.

Boy (girl?), was I wrong.

Strike one

My first call was to see if I could get a job selling Tupperware. According to the advertisement I answered the job would entail simply throwing a party and inviting all the ladies in my neighborhood. I was sure I could handle that.

I spoke with Tupperware manager Jim Holton who didn't seem at all surprised by the fact that a male wanted to sell bowls and pitchers to a bunch of housewives.

He said he could arrange an interview with me the same day to explain the products and the selling "formula".

"Then you have no real objection about me being a man?" I asked in disbelief.

"No. I have no objections whatsoever," he replied casually. "As a matter of fact we have some fellows selling our products about one or two, I think."

Well, what could I say? I told him who I was and what I was doing and he started to laugh.

"By the way," he added, "that was a perfectly legitimate answer, you know. Men do work for us."

Strike two

Okay, so I struck out once. So maybe some broadminded male manager does think men are equal to women. My next call would guarantee a job refusal. I'd phone one of those huge law offices in Toronto where they have glamorous, sexy private secretaries in every corridor and say I had all the qualifications except the measurements.

I answered an ad in a Toronto daily. A Mrs. Joy Richards, who was leaving her position as a private secretary to a senior partner of the firm, asked for my qualifications. I lied.

I told her I had all the qualifications and she asked me when I could come down for an interview. Her next statement was even more unbelievable.

"It's rather peculiar," she said. "You are the fourth man that has called seeking the position. No women have applied at all. I've talked it over with Mr — and he thinks having a male secretary would be marvellous."

At that point I was beginning to think someone had tipped her and the tupperware manager off about why I was phoning.

Finally, I told her why I was really phoning. She laughed too.

"I'm terribly disappointed, you know," she said as we rang off.

Strike three

As I called applying for the next job as a typist-receptionist-type secretary, I did note a little bit of hesitation in the voice of the girl who was handling the call.

She first asked me (I guess because of my deep voice) if I was calling on behalf of myself or "someone else".

When I said I was the one looking for the job, she seemed to get flustered.

"You wouldn't discriminate against me because I'm a man?" I asked her point blank.

"Umm. Ahh. No. I don't think so," she said, getting a little self-righteous. "Our institution would show no bias whatsoever as long as you meet with our qualifications."

"Oh," I said, finally thinking I had gotten a nibble with my bait. "And just what is your 'institution' and what would be your 'qualifications'?"

"This is the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, Sir, and all you would have to be able to do is the work."

I gulped a little before I apologetically told her why I was really phoning, thanked her and quickly hung up.

Ding Dong

Well, that made strike three, but I still had one more card to play. Have you ever heard of ding-dong this is your Avon MAN calling?

I phoned Avon here in Oshawa. No one was in so I had to leave a message. Unfortunately when Mrs. Alla Kimball of Avon phoned back, she phoned through the office switch board and the ruse was up. I had to say why I was calling right off the bat.

"Avon has had men represent them in the United States as well as Canada," Mrs. Kimball explained. "As a matter of fact I think there is a man selling our products somewhere in or near, Peterborough."

Well, that was all the punishment I could stand. I guess I have to admit that men are equal to women and could very easily get a job geared for women in today's society. Even though it's not a complete survey by any means, it does show something, but I haven't figured out what.

Maybe if I wasn't such a male chauvenist, I could find a moral there somewhere, probably the one my editor wanted me to find. If women only were [illegible] and [illegible].

EDITOR'S NOTE: Gee Garnet, we wish you had stuck out the search. We'd love to see you in the orange hot pants outfits of the A & W waitresses.

Staff writer and male chauvinist pig Garnet Cowsill practises his secretarial skills while perched on the knee of regional editor and women's libber Linda Sutton.

A couple of dollars, a bag of popcorn

By Jane Milne
Staff Writer

A couple of dollars, a bag of popcorn and a few chairs set in a row can turn your living room into a movie theatre.

This is accomplished by renting a projector from the Oshawa Public Library which also has a large variety of films available for its members at no cost.

"We have silent classics, comedies and children's films with titles numbering almost 700 in 16 mm. and about 100 in 8 mm.," says Isia Scott, film librarian

Before renting one of the library's projectors, the public is required to take a basic projectionist course at a nominal fee of $1

"The course is taught on Saturdays during the winter months and is not very difficult," she says "If you can drive a car you can run a projector."

One of the primary roles of the film library is for borrowers to take advantage of the films and equipment offered but it also works closely with organizations within the community such as the department of health and family counselling services to explain to people via film, what the service is concerned with.

"The most important role of the film library is the showing of films to people who aren't really readers," says Mrs. Scott

People who come to family counselling for example, may be asked to read a book on child psychology but if they can see a 14-minute film which gets the message across and then discuss it with the counsellor, it saves a lot of time as well as communicating to young mothers who are of a generation used to visual communication."

The Pine Ridge School for Boys has also used the film facilities of the library.

"This is where films really work," she says. "The films these boys concentrate on might promote different attitudes and help them. We have a program for Whitby jail too

The library members who use the films include many teenagers who Mrs Scott says take a pile of films out and show them all night.

The films are not catalogued professionally but in the way people would ordinarily ask for them which, she says, helps them in the selection

"We organize previews here for people doing essays on specific individuals or subjects too," she says "And young filmmakers often come to us for advice."

Mrs. Scott is interested in the development of these young filmmakers and works very hard each year on the library's film festival

"I think film is an art form on a par with writing and we are happy to give advice to any young filmmakers," she says. "Our next festival is in November but the amateurs should start now to get their films ready"

There is a full-time staff of four in the music and film departments of the library which is open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m Monday to Friday and Saturday until 6 p.m., except during July and August

All repairs to the films and equipment are done by the film library staff and she says they prefer the borrowers not to attempt repairs

"We had 41,000 people take out more than 2,100 films last year," says Mrs. Scott "Most of the work in repairs is not due to damage however, but rather putting on leads (a blank piece of film spliced to the beginning of the reel)

Having worked in the film library for 15 years, Mrs. Scott says she can remember when there was little entertainment in Oshawa for her six-year old child

"I suggested to the librarian at that time, that we start a film show for young children," she says

"From that time we became more involved and I find it very very exciting work to see the film library grow as the rest of the

and a few chairs set in a row can turn your living room into a theatre

Mona Matthews of the Oshawa public library's film section is shown here reconditioning film. The library has a wide range of films for its borrowers. Films are free to members of the library but rental of a projector costs $1.

library has

The library now offers film showings every Wednesday evening at dusk during July and August at Memorial Park, again at no cost

Films are bought according to the budget and the number of people they will be of interest to

"If it is a general audience film, we preview it here and decide if the film has general appeal or if the film is needed because the subject is not very well covered in our collection she says

If a film is on a very specific subject however, we don't make the choice ourselves We invite someone involved in the subject to preview it also

For example, if a film has something to do with the ministry of health, we would invite an officer from the ministry to view it."

Mrs. Scott says the film library doesn't buy anything on a certain subject without consulting those who know about it

"For children's films, we ask the staff of the boys' and girls' department to view it because they work constantly with children and know what they like to see, she says "After the film is previewed we then try it out on the children to see if we will reject or buy it

People can also request films they would like to see the library have in its collection

About three years ago, the type of request for films were on more serious types of subjects like drugs and pollution. Since then, Mrs Scott and her staff have noticed a change.

"There has been a swing to people wanting something funny and uplifting like the old comedies of Laurel and Hardy she says "Films that let us laugh at ourselves We take ourselves so seriously so much of the time

"We deal with churches quite a bit and one minister who comes here says what his congregation needs most is a good belly laugh so we have bough a number of funny films

Home care program cuts costs

Many patients can be cared for just as well at home as in a hospital at a substantial saving in cost, according to an official of the Ontario Ministry of Health.

Dr Robert King, physician in charge of the home care and medical rehabilitation program for the ministry, points out that the average per day cost of home care is $9.14 compared to between $50 and $100 in a general hospital.

The home care program is a response to a provincial need to find alternatives to expensive hospital care and is based on the premise that a patient can recover from an illness just as well and perhaps better in his home environment given the needed medical treatment, says King

Home care is utilized where a patient doesn't need the sophisticated equipment and constant attention available in a hospital but still requires medical care, he explains.

In fact, 20 per cent of the patients utilizing this service do so in lieu of hospital admission although most are in recovery after a stay in hospital where they required more intensive care

The program isn't new Six pilot programs were initiated in the province in 1958. But in 1970 the ministry got behind the home care program and now has organized home care units for 99 per cent of Ontario's population

Wayne Daniels is unsung Dr. Welby of the Generals

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

Having one job keeps a man busy enough But a man who takes on two jobs is like a human buzzsaw

That's the way to describe Wayne Daniels, father of two and junior executive of a material control department as well as trainer of the Oshawa Generals

Daniels, senior member of the trainers in the O.H.A., starting his seventh season, has accepted more responsibilities than most men who hold down the same position

Nicknamed "Hot-Dog by the Gens pucksters, he has gained a lot of respect over the years as head trainer with the club

Actually his job doesn't stop there. This year, for example, he has taken over the job of getting the local players in top shape actually before training camp even starts

On September 7 General Manager and Coach Gus Bodnar will be assembling all his players on the ice at the "Aud" for the first official workouts of the club For the past two weeks now Daniels has taken it upon himself to hold indoor workouts on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday nights so the players can arrive in camp in top shape.

"We've had great response to this idea and I feel strongly that a lot of local kids can crack the line-up by coming to camp in A-One condition," he says. "It has got to be a plus for the youngsters."

It's no secret that Bodnar is counting highly on his junior B Legionaires and Parkway TV club who captured the Ontario Midget title last spring to supply players to the Gens this season

Besides his training duties Daniels, along with his assistant John Newey has been busy lining up the camp for a total of 95 players invited for tryouts

All this week Daniels has been busy putting away 35 dozen sticks, new gloves, skates and other equipment.

Actually, he is almost a housewife to the players

He and Newey look after all the cleaning of the equipment. In fact, they even purchase the soap now in 100 pound bags

"I guess we're just one big happy family and getting ready for training camp takes of a lot of time and effort to make sure every thing goes off like clock work"

To say that Daniels is Bodnar's right arm would be the understatement of the year. During the past couple of years when Bodnar was forced to bed through illness Daniels took over the coaching duties and turned in a credible showing

This in itself displays the confidence which the Generals' management has in Daniels

Each year at this time Daniels takes his summer holidays which he calls his business holiday to prepare for training camp and the upcoming season Actually Daniels works all year long at his job and has earned a lot of friends over the years for his dedication to his parttime job He is the only trainer in the O H A who does the trainers job on a parttime basis

This year, Daniels will be taking over his own private office at the "Aud" and Bodnar will have new facilities on the west side of the building

Since Daniels has taken over from Stan Wasilett who holds the similar position now with the Minnesota North Stars of the NHL, he has made vast improvements

The club now has it's own washing machine, dryer, skate sharpener and this year are installing a whirl-pool bath to help nurse injuries

Daniels could almost pass as a hockey's answer to TV's famous Doctor Welby

His duties don't end there either He, along with Mike Motherwell John Newey and Coleen Dohoughe prepares the game programs for each Gens' home encounter. Trying to follow Daniels around is almost an impossibility as he seems to be going in 10 different directions at one time

One thing for sure, he's well organized and thrives on work and the Gens are proud to have him back again this year

He's the unsung hero who helps Gens become a winner without the fans even knowing about it

Oshawa Generals trainer Wayne Daniels babies his boys

The 31-year-old GM Gold Cup Lawn Bowling tournament was officially opened by Mayor James Pottlecary at the Oshawa Lawn Bowling Club, scene of the premier Ontario event Here the mayor delivers the traditional "first bowl" to start the day-long event that drew entries from all parts of the province.

All-star Waszczuk returns to Kent State

Henry Waszczuk all star centre with Kent State University Football Club, left Oshawa on the weekend to begin workouts with the Tangerine Bowl finalists

A native of this city and an Eastdale Collegiate graduate, he could become an all American on this season after an impressive showing last year

This is Waszczuk's fourth season in college ball below the border and his second with Ohio Kent State

He played earlier for Buffalo

His Canadian and dual citizenship rights are owned by the Toronto Argos of the eastern football conference

It is expected that Kent State will be appearing in another bowl game this year prior to which Waszczuk is planning on wed in December to Miss Donaldson, an Oshawa girl

Hawkeys blow second half to cool playoff chances

By Scott Mercer
Junior Football Writer

Oshawa Hawkeyes were impressive in the first half of the Ontario Junior Football Conference game against the Peterborough Panthers, but didn't realize that football is an hour-long game

As a result, Panthers hung an embarrassing 35-14 licking on the Hawkeyes throwing play off chances almost out the window

Oshawa now have a season mark of only one victory against Oakville and four other losses

With only five games remaining in the schedule, including encounters with good, experienced clubs like Scarboro Rams and Lakeshore Bears, the season, to all intents and purposes has come to a quick end

Hawkeyes seemed unbeatable in the first 30 minutes of play. Panthers did strike early in the game as they marched 62 yards in five plays for a major to snare a 6-zip lead But from that point on Hawkeyes dominated

First Rob Craigen returned a third down punt more than 90 yards for the double blue Than, just as the half was ending, Jim Barry threw a halfback option pass to wide receiver Tom Buchanan for another major and Hawkeyes looked secure, leading 14-6, but the scoring ended there

Hawkeyes couldn't find themselves

Quarterback Jim McHugh impressive only a week earlier, lost his magic as both ground and aerial attacks failed Interceptions spelled the beginning of the end for pivot McHugh and the Hawkeyes

Running back Bob Birkenshaw lugged the ball over for another fifthick city six-pointer The onslaugh continued with the Petes rolling up four more major scores

It was Bob Patterson carrying the ball over from five yards out, than quarterback Dixon Lawson firing a perfect strike to John Hardill and Roger Clarke for other TD's

All this week long coach Bill McTeer has had his club preparing for tomorrow night's game against the Brantford Bisons at Civic Fields

Oshawa Tony's Stats prepared by Bob Wing

Meet Brian Campbell of Oshawa Tony's

If Oshawa Tony s is going to be a successful club in the Ontario Fastball League it must introduce young talent each season

Those are the words of field manager Ron Wright when the Tony s opened indoor workouts last winter

You know said Wright to be a winner you must have youth on your side A perfect example is the Montreal Canadiens in hockey Each campaign they always bring in youngsters to get them established in the winning format and if they develop quicker than expected, that's an extra bonus

Brian Campbell 24-year-old infielder- outfielder is a perfect example of what Wright was talking about

Campbell has accepted the challenge of the Ontario Fastball League and has done on outstanding job when given the opportunity

At the start of the season, Campbell was slated as a utility player even though he is normally a third baseman a job he held in Senior B ball with Falcon TV a year earlier

I realized that cracking the Tony s line-up is like mission impossible says Brian, but I really want to give it a real shot

At the start of the season he was assigned shot duty playing both the outfield and infield He got a break when regular shortstop and the club s top hitter Darryl Hudgins broke his hand He was given the chance of fulltime employment as a replacement

Campbell didn t mess up the chance and has taken advantage of the opportunity

It s a big jump taking over from Hudgy but I feel that the help I ve received especially from third baseman Jimmie Rowden and his other infield mates has really helped Sure I was nervous at first but game by game I ve gained more confidence in myself in doing the job

Brian is modest when he talks about himself but he has done an outstanding job

Should Hudgins return, he will find it a hard time trying to get back his old job

Unlike the other player on the Tony's roster Campbell didn t have a minor softball background

My dad was employed in construction work and our family moved from city to city So I didn t have much opportunity to play ball until I arrived in Oshawa

At that time Campbell started playing with Scugog Cleaners juniors under coach Jed Wilson and that was where he received his apprenticeship in the game

Those were great years with Wilson in junior says Campbell who is only just size for an infielder 5-foot 6 ½ inches and only 145 pounds

In junior, Campbell was a key member when Scugog s won an Ontario title and the coveted junior softball tournament held each year in July at Alexandra Park

There s a world of difference between senior B ball and junior A Campbell says especially in pitching

Game after game you re facing the best in Ontario and you ve got to be up for every contest

Without Campbell this season Tony s would have a gaping hole at shortstop to fill His ability to make the plays as shortstop has helped Tony s win the tight games and is one of the main reasons why Tony s are the club packed to beat for the O F L title in the rookie season of operation

We re going to win everything says Campbell our club is cocky with our outstanding record this season it's just a team effort all the way

He considers Burlington and Newmarket as the clubs to beat for the championship

Besides being a top flight ball player his favorite hobby is photography and he plans to build his own dark room this fall

His lovely wife Lana a native of Ajax, is his biggest supporter and she s glad he s found regular work with Tony s But then so are Tony s

Despite a strong effort in the first half of last Friday's game the Hawkeye's went down to Peterborough 35-14

Oshawa seeks Canadian softball championships

The Oshawa Minor Softball Association will dispatch its president Bruce McArthur and Jim Shaw, sports editor of This Week, to Ottawa today to witness the Canadian Softball championship to be played in Hull, Que

Oshawa is attempting to host the 1974 championships next Labor Day week as part of the city s 50th anniversary celebrations

Last year both McArthur and Shaw went to Edmonton Alta to watch the operations of the Western Canadian championships

Oshawa has an excellent chance of landing the games which feature the best softball teams from the 10 provinces Actually, this is the only true Canadian championships because not only each province sends a representative but so does the North West Territories

McArthur says Oshawa has the finest facilities in Canada located at Civic Fields where the total of three games could be played at one time Plans are to convert the football field in softball diamonds for the championships

It is expected that if Oshawa is successful, it should bring about 100,000 fans into the city to watch the games

At present Oshawa boasts the top softball team in Ontario today, the Tony's who captured the west division pennant of the Ontario Fastball League

This season Tony's have captured 28 victories and suffered only seven defeats Tony s along with Falcon TV, and R & H Cabinets are the three local senior teams who could take part in the championships

As a host city the parent Canadian Amateur Softball Association allows the local team to have a representative club

Plans in the Oshawa bid include a mammoth parade a mini mid-way, a victory dance at the Civic Auditorium, a beer garden and a national TV contract for the final game to be televised from coast to coast

The actual bidding for the 1974 championships will be taking place in Charlottown, P E I November 9, 10 and 11

Vancouver, B.C and Regina Sask. are also seeking the championships

So far the Oshawa bid seems to have the inside track after an impressive presentation last year in Edmonton

B & R Transporters are heavy favorites to take Mississauga

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

Defending Ontario Junior 'B' lacrosse champions, Whitby B & R Transporters, are heavily favored to win against Mississauga in the Ontario Central League finals

Despite having a 10-game lay-off after eliminating Ajax Knights in four straight games, General Manager Jim Brady considers his club ready for the Mississauga team which play four regular season games with them during the year

In the last outing Whitby lost 21-10 but had already clinched first place in the league standings

Tonight is game number two in the best-of-seven series Other dates in the finals are Friday at the Brooklin Arena Sunday in Mississauga and if a fifth game is necessary, next Tuesday in Brooklin

Mississauga is a small club with plenty of front line talent but lack depth in the line-up compared with the Transporters

Brady expects the series should go between five and six games.

Graham Patterson is the big "gunner" for Mississauga, and goaltender, Paul Boland, who had an outstanding series against Ajax, is a key figure for the Transporters

Winner of this series will advance to the provincial semi-finals playing either Niagara Falls who captured a Gold Metal in Canadian summer games, Oakville, who upset the first place Hamilton Hurricanes, or Kitchener

Six teams playoff

Six teams remain in the Ontario Amateur Softball Association play-offs Two teams have fallen by the wayside

Still in contention are Lucky One Pop Mart who are playing Belleville in Intermediate "AA", Falcon TV are the Senior "B" representative and are playing Peterboro' Kisel Fuels are meeting Toronto Police in Industrial Intermediate, while the juveniles, midgets and pee-wees are in play-off series against Toronto teams

Meanwhile, Richmond Hill have ousted the Oshawa bantam and squirt clubs

Biggest news from the O.A.S.A. is that Tony's have refused to play in the Senior "A" bracket

Ron Wright is Tony's forgotten man

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

When a ball team is winning all the glory goes to the players

When the club's losing, it's all the manager's fault

It's always that way. The field manager is the forgotten guy unless things are bad

Such is the case with Ron Wright, now in his fourth season as bossman of Tony's the most successful Senior "A" softball club in Ontario today

This week, Tony's enter the Ontario Fastball League play-offs having the best win-lose record in softball, the top pitchers, and some of the hitters in the game today

Things haven't been rosey for Wright this season He lost two of his top players through injuries: shortstop Darryl Hudgins and second sacker Dave Stewart. It takes a top manager to fill the gaps with players who can do the job as capable replacements

Somehow Wright has never been recognized even though he has impressive credentials. in the game, having been on six provincial winners. That's not bad for being only 31 years-of-age

It's no secret that Tony's general manager, Gerry Brooks, and Wright haven't always seen eye to eye on diamond moves, but this year it seems that Wright has the complete say on who plays and when they do play

"I admit Gerry and myself haven't gotten along too well together over the years," says Wright, "but he's got his job to do and I've got mine. One thing we've both got in common is we want Tony's to be a winner

Wright admits the reason Tony's have been so successful this season is he's got players who are young enough and yet have a lot of experience

Those three years playing in the Ontario Michigan League have been great says Wright You know in a lot of tight situations we almost always make the right move because our players have been confronted with the problems over the past three years. Experience has been the key reason for victories."

Even after clinching first place over three weeks ago, Tony's still keep on winning despite the fact othe club is experimenting with various player combinations

"Having a designated hitter rule has really helped this season,, admits Wright, as we can make a lot of moves "

Very seldom will you see Wright call down a player as he firmly believes in the man-to-man attitude towards the game

"By the time you reach senior ball you should be accomplished in the fundamentals of the game. All I really try to do is point out and correct the minor mistakes,"

This approach has been very successful for Wright Sure, Tony's have some great pitchers in Paul Wannamaker and Barry Timbers

Tony's don't really have the best individual ball players in the league, but as a team they do. Field manager Ron Wright sees to that. He's the man behind the scenes who keeps them winning

Ken and Daphne can hardly keep up with kids

Tennis teacher Daphne Ives shows a student a serve

For any successful organization, youth is a necessity

Such is the case at the Oshawa Tennis Club where youngsters have been jamming the courts to learn Canada's fastest growing sport-tennis

Ken and Daphne Ives, natives of Kent England and Canadian residents for four years have been running such a successful junior program they are running out of space

Over 200 youngster ranging from the ages of eight to 16 are busy learning the fundamentals of the game

Daphne is the driving force behind the organization which is rated as one of the best in Ontario

"We try to first of all get the kids enjoying the sport says Daphne "and once that we have established this formula we get down to the fundamentals of the game

She stresses the inculcation of positive attitudes into the players so they feel the game is fun rather than work

Lessons are held each Tuesday and Thursday afternoon and again on Saturday morning Courses are run in various neighbourhood parks including Baker, Brookside and Radio

Daphne credits Jean Bell and Andy Bryce with doing great jobs at the parks on behalf of the juniors

Naturally a lot of players show more promise than others and these youngsters are Rich Stirling Vicky Ball Ben Luwekx Mark Petre, Craig Andrews and John Armstrong, just to mention a few

This is the second year of operation of the junior program under the Ives' leadership, and contribution towards the development of the sport has been unbelievable

Daphne isn't interested really in developing outstanding players but does believe that a player must be mentally prepared to play and do his best in each game.

The junior program has various groups including the white, brown and red sections

If you wish to compare the price of playing tennis to other sports tennis turns out to be very reasonable. At the Park all you require in running shoes balls and rackets which you should be able to pick up for about $10.00 At the OTC players are requested to play in white clothing only

The Ives work closely with the Oshawa Recreation department which has been a major help towards the organization of the game

Three of the Ives' children-Glen 13, John 11, Lynn 10 - are active in the program themselves, while the youngest member of the household Ian, 6, is waiting in the wings for his opportunity to hit the courts

Daphne works countless hours at the instruction end of it and has nothing but praise for her assistants who help her out at the sessions Each group has about 12 players, permitting a lot of personal instruction

The way the Ives' junior program has progressed it looks as if more tennis courts should soon be erected in the city as every one seems to be carrying a tennis racket these days

Classy amateur has bright pro boxing future

By Jim Shaw
Sports Editor

Danny Stokes was always a classy amateur boxer. Now a professional Stokes could become a great one

Last week fighting in his home town of Ajax in a Pro-Am card at the Ajax Community Arena Stokes had an easy time of it using Ron Williams from Pittsburgh, Pa as a punching bag to record a TKO

Stokes featured in the main event showed too much class as he completely outboxed his opponent A free swinger Stokes put away Williams in the second round

Another local boxer Davey Vent from West Hill, came up with another impressive showing taking Neil Jones another Pittsburgh fighter

It was strictly no contest from the opening bell It was Vent's four straight victory, including three by KO As an amateur Vent was unbeaten in 37 bouts

Both fighters will be at Maple Leaf Gardens in Toronto next month featured on the Clve Gray - Jose Napoles bout It is expected that both Stokes and Vent will be boxing in the States within the next few months if they are successful at MLG

In the amateur bouts Derrick Campbell of Oshawa drew with Dillon Smith from Toronto Mark Allman of Oshawa lost a split decision to Mike Dobbin Oshawa's John Moorehead lost to Wayne Dobbin while Shawn Campbell another Oshawa fighter, lost his bout Tom Kay bested Al Heckbert Both are Oshawa fighters Mike Lahoda of Oshawa lost a TKO

A TRADITION OF HELPFUL SERVICE FOR OVER 100 YEARS

Sunday schools alive and well

By Rev. John A. Robb

A cursory survey of annual reports from historical denominations, as summarized in the newspapers, would tend to indicate that Sunday Schools in general are showing a steady downward trend and are sick "well nigh unto death"

Various heroic and desperate acts of surgery have been performed to introduce new and "modern" up-to-date curricula with ever-decreasing emphasis on Scripture and in many instances flat denials of the miraculous therein'

The trend is not surprising at all when the diet is man-centered'

In contra-distinction to this dismal picture, the conservative or evangelical protestant churches show massive increases in their Sunday Schools across the land

Calvary Baptist Church here in our city has just obtained its ninth bus for Sunday School purposes with some 1100 students in attendance! Our own Sunday School has exactly doubled in the last 12 months. A well known Baptist Church in Hammond, Indiana, where Dr. Jack Hyles is pastor, had some 19,500 in attendance on its Anniversary Sunday (which is not bad for an opener)

Now all this must be clearly explained in order that parents reading this column will waken up and send their children to their Community Bible School

"Bring up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it". J. Edgar Hoover, former FBI. Chief, stated that less than one percent of people who had come through Sunday Schools ever appeared in Juvenile Courts

The purpose of Sunday School is not only to study the Scriptures (which indicate the purpose and meaning in life) but to make them meaningful in everyday life, starting from a personal acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour The Bible (not man's view of it) is our final and only authority

Some of you parents will bend over backwards to see that your child learns swimming, skating, skiing, tennis etc., and yet have no interest in seeing that your children are given solid moral teachings from the Bible, which will prepare them for not only life but death also (from which one heart beat separates any one of us).

Please do not come crying to me a few years from now because your child is running wild, and trying to find answers in drugs and the occult! Do not leave it up to the child The choice is yours to make This is a good time of year to start your entire family

All conservative schools have not only classes for children two-years-old and upwards but also teen classes and several adult groups

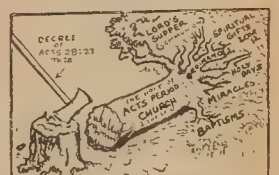
BEREAN BRIEFS



THEY GOT THE AXE!
O.M.B.

When John Baptist was talking with the Sadducees and Pharisees that came to his baptism he called them a brood or offspring of venomous vipers and warned them that the axe was laid at the root of the trees (Mt 3.10). This was a warning to Israel that they should bring forth fruit

In Romans 11 Paul tells us that Gentile believers had been grafted into the olive tree where the natural branches the Jews who believed not were broken out These Gentiles were represented by wild olive branches They were grafted in because the tree was not bearing fruit

At Ac 28:28 the tree was cut down The root is all that remains and some day it will revive

Today salvation is not of the Jews but has been sent to the Gentiles. So now there is an entirely different hope than there was then The hope of the Pentecostal church ceased.

With it went the Passover. However, since it was forbidden at any time to the uncircumcision (Ex 12 48), the early church made up of Gentiles had to have a ritual, so they borrowed the ancient ritual of the sun worship of the Babylonians, and instead of a feast in the home, it was a ritual in the temple We explain this as many do not know about Beal's supper and where it came from

With it went the spiritual gifts that were connected with the kingdom and its gospel No one has had spiritual gifts for 1900 years

With it went the ordinances whatever they were See Col 2 16-23 Gentiles have none

With it went signs and miracles which were in connection with the kingdom gospel

With it went the holy days, especially the 3 feasts, Passover Pentecost, and the Feast of Tabernacles All males were supposed to visit Jerusalem at these feast days The church of the dispensation of the mystery has no holy days, therefore no looking for the new moons and the like to find them

And with it went all the ceremonial washings, which were so observed and revered by the Jews The average Jewish child of an orthodox family had up to 7 baptisms a day! They were clean

Accordingot Hosea 6 2, this decree will be reversed after two days and the tree will grow again

Are you all wrapped up in a dead tree?

6:30 am and 7:30 pm

If you were to ask what was one of the main ingredients that separates CKLB from the other radio stations — we would answer our coverage of news events. We don't spend an awful lot of time reporting news you can hear on the other radio stations. We devote the majority of our time to telling you about what's going on in the Oshawa, Whitby, Ajax, Pickering area because the other radio stations don't. We think you want to know about what affects you first and that's the way we report it — first.

August 29 to September 8

BLACK CREEK PIONEER VILLAGE, TORONTO

This special section is a supplement to The Mississauga News, Oakville Beaver, The Ajax News Advertiser, Oshawa This Week and Stouffville Markham Tribune August 29 30 1973

Removal of the 12 per cent sales tax has taken some of the dilemma out of back-to-school shopping.

Despite this savings to consumers there will be a considerable increase in one of the most popular ensembles — stretch denims are expected to increase $1 in price. But that's the only bad news. The rest of the news for junior fashionmongers is good In fact it's checkered

Fall 1973 will see youngsters in a wide variety of checks — houndstooth, windowpane, argyles, giant plaids, woven plaids or plain plaids These are all teamed with solid colors or used to trim solids

Color combinations will include camel, gold, green, orange and navy Everything is sporty and very much in keeping with adult trends. Bomber and battle jackets are still going strong — many of these are elasticized or tied at the waist

Girls will be ready for anything in their sportswear. Two-piece pantsuits with cuffs, checked jackets with solid pants, smocks with trousers and layered T-shirts with slacks will be popular with juniors Blouses with long sleeves and elasticized waists will be worn with slacks or teamed with two-piece ensembles Belts and ties will be worn with these clothes The newest look is a studded overall with a long-sleeved blouse. Party dresses are still long with ruffles and a quilted effect Flounces and ribbons abound

In boys' wear, according to Children's Apparel Merchandising Aids (CAMA), houndstooth and argyle checks are omnipresent, alone or in combination with solids The classic grey knit suit plays an important role in boys' fashions Aside from knits there are a few corduroys Battle jackets and belted blazers are popular items

Moosa Akhalwava of Putzy's Tots and Teens says borg and leather-look coats will sell well in the fall Ninety-nine per cent of outer wear will be washable

Most winter coats and jackets will be wind and waterproof and crack-and-peel-resistant Watch for quilted sleeves, knitted collars, magnetized buckles and coated nylon Popular colors include bright yellow with navy trim, cognac, purple, blue and brown. Many coats are treated with silicone finish and are stain resistant

Mr Akhalwava says the majority of girls' coats will be mid-calf in length but there is a return to the regular length Snowmobile suits for sports and school are expected to be very big again this winter Snow-wear has an anti-glisse fabric to prevent children from sliding and are hooded, belted and zippered along the leg and from crotch to neck Some of the newest pants in snowwear look like overalls They are made of quilted polyester or nylon and include double knees and storm cuffs for added warmth and wear

HURRY ON DOWN TO SHERIDAN MALL'S LOWER LEVEL

Ever wonder why the main floor of Sheridan Mall looks a bit empty at times?

If so, take a look downstairs The crowd is riding down to the lower level of the mall for tasty luncheons, a swing at the new putting green and quick-service shops

A market style dining area has created an intimate spot for an imaginative bite-to-eat, a place to relax with a grapping book, or just having coffee with friends

A brick-tile boulevard is enlivened with colorful overhead flags and small meat block tables The food is served quickly and the menu is varied Shoppers have a wide choice of cuisine. Chinese food or seafood or maybe a simple hot dog with a drink tends to revive weary shoppers.

SHERIDAN DOWN UNDER

Since its installation the 18-hole putting green has provided countless hours of enjoyment and friendly competition for Sheridan visitors It is geared to accommodate 68 golfers at a time and proves to be a popular sport with all family members. Children enjoy playing while their parents to the weekly shopping

Many of the shops in the lower level sell consumer items which provide much pleasure to the buyer. It's the place to browse for a good camera, color television, stereo, radio, golf clubs and luxurious furniture for that dream home.

SALON

A recent addition to the lower level will please our female shoppers. Riccio's Beauty Salon which has branches in the Skyline Hotel, Shoppers World and Peel-Village Square, opened its doors early in June. Many shoppers took advantage of the opening specials on body waves bleaching and tints.

DANCING

The Bay Ridges School of Dancing, which offers lessons to people aged 3 to 45, is holding registration the week of Sept. 3. Classes are offered in tap dancing and ballet. Lessons will start on Sept 10

Parents appreciate the location of professional offices because trips to the dentist, doctor and insurance offices can be tied in with weekly shopping trips and parking is unlimited

BINGO

Don't forget the bounce of blighty bingo. The Kinsmen Club of Bay Ridges is earning money in aid of community services with its bingo games. They are held every third and fourth Wednesday in the banquet hall off Sheridan Mall which is located in the lower level

From time to time the lower level has a variety of displays and shows which are designed to provide you with a guide to shopping Come into the lower level of Ontario County's Friendly Market place and experience a new dimension in shopping pleasure

Store hours are 9:30 a.m. to 9 30 p.m. So hop aboard an excalator and ride down to see us

YOU'RE NUTS TO BLOW THAT MONEY ON HIM. YOU KNOW HOW HE PLAYS HOOKY!"

What to wear on the way up

Mother is ready to go back to school in her three-piece ensemble. Trousers and matching jacket are teamed with a dark pullover for the fashionable layered look. An outfit which will serve her well during the fall season.

So you're getting it on this fall

Sliding back into the work force now that the children are in school, enrolling in university or starting a brand new job as a top ladder executive

No matter where you're heading chances are you'll be wearing sweaters or jackets when you arrive These items of clothing are spearheading the fashion scene this fall. The sweatery look of sportswear dressing has taken off like a rocket You can team them with skirts, trousers, beads and narrow belts to look glamorous or governessy, carefree and windblown or just plain casual

JACKETS

But this year's new oversize jacket isn't going to work with last year's wide trousers

Gone too are pleated skirts, mixes of pattern, fingers of rings and multi-colored dark nail polish

This fall fashion will demand one color or tones of one color from head-to-toe. Contrast breaks the line. Dresses will be lose on top and tight on the hip and a lean skirt and sweater can be worn with an oversized coat or jacket. Leave necklines bare — a little skin is feminine and alluring.

LOOSE DRESSES

Watch for soft loose jersey dresses that let it all hang out at the top and cinch in at the waist with a good belt Keep an eye out for the matching plaid skirt and skinny sweater under an oversized knee-length coat It's the small feminine line underneath that will win points with the large coat this fall

Tailored suits can be worn with soft, femine sweaters Sweater coats with matching cardigans will also be popular. The body cardigan will return — it serves as a coat or a jacket — and it could be worn every single day. Long cardigans should be worn with skirts which are long with straight-falling pleats

LONG

Because of their shape and weight you can wear these long sweaters deep into the fall. Pull the look together with a classic shirt with collar and cuffs turned up over the sweater and add a big colored bead necklace If the cardigan isn't belted — try adding a narrow belt at the waist. The younger crowd is calling the cardigan a fanny jacket because it brushes the derriere Many have rolled collars and deep ticket pockets to make them look more like a jacket. These can be teamed with checked, tweedy or solid trousers and crocheted hats

If you're not into trousers the skirt has made a fantastic revival. Fashion czars claim it is now an alternative to pants

One of the most important new styles is the Big Skirt which is gored to flare wide around the knees. These should be matched with tailored shirts, all the new sweaters, bangles and fat colored beads — basically the same things worn with trousers. Once again the shirt cuffs are turned up over the sweater. Two or three good skirts can go a long way if you have a large collection of sweaters, stockings, chunky shoes and jewelry. Your jackets can be alternated with skirts and trousers

You have a variety of jackets from which to choose — the blazer, wrape-around, shirt and cardigan twin set Heavier outer wear will take the form of short jackets of fake fur with square shoulders and deep cuffs, a style reminiscent of the Forties These can be worn with a knit cap and a loosely tied muffler

Fashion experts say shoes will be lighter, prettier and more femine. Forget about boots except slim ankleboots to wear with your leaner trousers. Bronze slingbacks and black silk ankle sandals are good for evening while slim, high-heeled pumps are good all-around shoes for dresses and suits

BLACK

Black sweaters will be seen in the cocktail lounge and at chic parties. They can be lightened with rhinestone, a gleaming black fox boa, luscious red make-up, silver bangles and necklaces and stylish handbags. Brown is also a beautiful new night color enlivened with silvery earrings and bracelets and rhinestones. Blouses will also be worn after five — opened at the neck and enhanced with clips, jewelry and bold colors. During the daytime the same seductive blouse can be worn with a sweater at the office. Accessories for evening also include scarves, beads and thin chains.

Don't think about hemlines at all this fall — as a general rule the straighter the skirt the longer the length, the higher the heel. An active short skirt with pleats at the sides can be worn an inch above the knee with a flatter heel

SWINGING

The fall collection calls for a swinging head of hair — longer (and all in one length) than you've been wearing it

As for makeup — that Loden green so popular in fall clothing — can be registered with a makeup that focuses on a warm auburn eye, amber cheeks with matching fingernails and an apricot mouth

BALLET

REGISTRATION DAYS

Lower Level

TUESDAY SEPTEMBER 4th 4pm - 8pm

THURSDAY SEPTEMBER 6th 4pm - 8pm

SATURDAY SEPTEMBER 8th 10am - 3pm

PRE-REGISTRATIONS ARE NOW BEING ACCEPTED FOR THE NEW SEASON STARTING SATURDAY, SEPT. 8th.
PRE-BALLET CLASSES FOR CHILDREN 4 YRS. AND UP. PRIMARY CHILDREN 5 1/2 YRS. OLD. GRADE 1 BALLET STUDENTS SHOULD BE 7 1/2-8 YRS. OLD. ALL OLDER CHILDREN WILL BE PLACED BY AGE OR BY PREVIOUS TRAINING. ALL CLASSES ARE CONDUCTED BY PROFESSIONAL ADULT TEACHERS.

Following a highly successful career as First Principal Soloist in many of the main European Ballet Companies, Mr Roehm has now turned his interest and talent to teaching and choreography. He has made numerous appearances across Europe including Paris, London Berlin, Rome, Venice, etc. He has performed for international Ballet Festivals, as well as T.V. appearances with the BBC London, French Television, German T.V. and CBC Canada.

ULRICH ROEHM, A.R.A.D.-Mr. Roehm has been active as a teacher and choreographer for children's ballet and pre-ballet classes for many years, also for professional dancers. His versatile repertoire includes classical ballet (the front picture shows him as the Prince in Swan Lake), Jazz, Folklore and Musicals (My Fair Lady). In Canada he has performed with the National Ballet of Canada's Company "Prologue to the Performing Arts", and with the Canada Opera Company. Mr. Roehm is an Advanced Member of the "Royal Academy of Dancing", London, England.

Mrs. Cook has taught with many dancing schools throughout Toronto for several years, which has given her a vast experience in working with children of all ages. For the last few years she has been teaching with the Bay Ridges School of Dancing and the Toronto Dance Academy. Before coming to Canada, she received her Ballet Training with well known teachers in London, England, also with the Sadler's Wells Ballet School. At an early age Mrs Cook received her first medal and awards in Tap, which led to an intensive study of this dance form with Ellen Terry, later she became a member of her famous troupe.

NINA COOK

Take this opportunity to give your child an artistic dance education. All classes are held in the most modern studio in Canada. Fully equipped with Barres, Mirrors and Air-Conditioned for complete comfort. Remember — Ballet will help improve your child's figure skating.

Doctor your home in the fall

Fall is a good time to check up clean up and fix up the home

Since it is important to inspect the entire home, both inside and out, this 10-step plan might be employed to insure a thorough job

Step one: Start on the outside and at the top Look to the chimney for loose bricks stones, missing mortar or corrosion of metal flashings The roof may have loose or warped shingles to be renailed, cemented or replaced

Guttering and downspouts always seem to need some work, if it's just to remove the leaves, or to repair, replace damaged parts.

Step two: Check exterior walls for chalking and peeling Touch-ups or total repainting might be needed Maybe this will be the year to install new siding

Doors and windows must pass inspection too Look for cracks and rotting in wooden frames, broken panes to be replaced and loose panes to be secured

Step three: Still on the outside but now at the bottom, check the foundation and basement. Small cracks here are easily repaired with water proofing cement that can be applied with pointing tool or trowel

Step four: Now for a look around the home grounds A bit of trimming and planting might be just the thing to make the lawn and garden take shape Holes should be filled with gravel or sand, then covered with turf

Step five: Now to the interior. Check the plumbing, heating and air-conditioning Pipes should be checked for rust, corrosion furnaces, air-conditioning units cleaned and tested. In all these areas professional assistance is a must

Step six: Check walls, ceilings and floors Warping, cracking, peeling or just plain drabness are what to look for here Today's easily applied wallpapers, paints, panelling and flooring can give home interiors a real face lift

Step seven: Check kitchen, bath, laundry and utility areas In addition to general refurbishing, new cabinets, fixtures and appliances may be needed

Step eight: Check living space to see how it can be expanded or used more effectively Unfinished basements are now easily transformed into family or game rooms with the help of modern building materials

Attics can be expanded and finished for added bedroom space, or perhaps a new addition to the home is in order An estimate will be needed

Step nine: Wiring should be inspected inside and out for its adequacy. Professional help is needed here

Step ten: Step into action Decide what work is to be done by do-it-yourself method and what work is to be done with the help of home improvement specialists

BE WARY

Shop, compare, get estimates before you leap into a project The Canadian Consumer Handbook has a chapter on home improvement which provides a warning to the householder

In recent years thousands of Canadians have been victimized by unscrupulous operators of phoney home repair firms. What makes this racket particularly insidious is that in most cases, the victims are elderly and disabled, the group in our society least able to look after themselves "

"Using such tactics as phone soliciting and door-knocking and preying on the ignorance of the average homeowner, these bandits are able, within a few weeks, to victimize an entire town and then disappear into thin air with a lucrative haul in their back pockets."

BUSINESS BUREAU

'Many more simply place huge ads in the local yellow pages and then wait for people to call them. In reality, they operate no more than an answering service. Pleas by the Better Business Bureau to have more thorough investigation by the directory service have not resulted in any reforms to date "

"Generally home repair racketeers operate in teams and out of unmarked trucks They are extremely reluctant to give out estimates and will not produce an address which can be tracked down

Now's the time for vegetables

One way of looking at the modern Ontario supermarket is as the world's biggest, most complete most full service nutrient bank. Let's take a closer look at the produce department. Food specialists at the Ontario Food Council, Ministry of Agriculture and Food assure us you can find low calorie, Vitamin C, Vitamin A, minerals and bulk in this section and they're all Ontario grown.

If counting calories is your thing, help yourself to strawberries (55), blueberries (65), asparagus (30), or wax beans (30) to mention but a few. For a one-cup serving of each of these, you'll only spend the number of calories mentioned in the brackets. That's mighty decent eating for such a low calorie intake.

VITAMIN C

It is currently fashionable to discuss the pros of high Vitamin C intake to prevent colds. Research has not yet proven the advantages of high intake, but one thing is clear. The Canadian Council on Nutrition advises that 30 milligrams of this vitamin be ingested daily to prevent scurvy, (a disease marked by spongy gums and loosening of the teeth). This amount you can get from expensive acid tablets, or imported fruit or Ontario grown vegetables. Look for raw cabbage, iceberg lettuce, or a beautiful tomato. They supply this vitamin in the amount recommended.

Another vitamin to be considered is Vitamin A which is necessary for vision. It can be obtained cheaply from yellow or green vegetables. Many minerals in various amounts are essential to our well-being ... the main function of iron (one of these many minerals), is to serve as an essential part of hemoglobin (blood). men and women should intake 6 and 10 milligrams daily respectively.

Fruits and vegetables are not famous for their iron content, but do contain some which is better than containing none.

Roughage or bulk is the indigestible material found in food. In vegetables it is called cellulose and forms the skeleton of most plants. Even though it contributes very little if anything to the purely nutritive value of the diet, roughage does aid the mechanics of digestion. The kinds of roughage readily available are from fruits and vegetables of all kinds, especially those eaten raw or at least, unprocessed.

An added advantage to eating fresh fruits and vegetables is that they clean the teeth and exercise the gums.

This suggestion from food specialists at the Ontario Food Council, Ministry of Agriculture and Food is that when you next visit your local supermarket you withdraw some nutrients from the produce bank.

CORN SALAD
(using fresh Ontario corn)

2 or 3 ears Ontario corn
½ cup celery, diagonally sliced
2 tablespoons green pepper cut in thin strips
2 tablespoons green onion, chopped
1 tablespoon pimiento, chopped
1 tablespoon parsley, finely chopped
3 tablespoons salad oil
1 tablespoon tarragon vinegar
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon dry mustard
¼ teaspoon freshly ground pepper

Drop corn into boiling salted water and cook for 3 to 5 minutes. Cool. Cut niblets from the cobs to measure 2 cups. Combine corn, celery, green pepper, onions, pimiento and parsley. Mix oil, vinegar and seasonings in a jar. Pour over vegetables. Allow to marinate in refrigerator at least 4 hours or overnight.

Makes 6 servings if used as side salad and 12 servings if used on buffet table.

TARRAGON VINEGAR

4 teaspoons dried tarragon
1 cup vinegar

Heat vinegar. Add tarragon. Bottle. Refrigerate. Strain 1 week later. Keeps indefinitely.

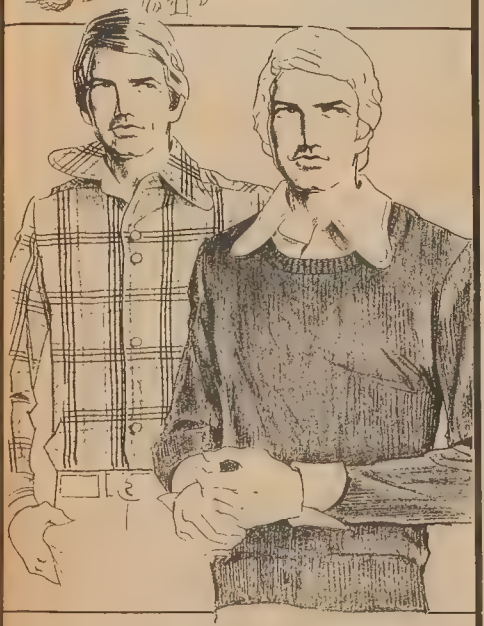
Want the new GATSBY Look? You'll find it at Jack Fraser.



Wear a Caramy knit sweater over a Harraday shirt and presto–the great Gatsby look!

He was a product of the feisty 20's — a carefree time when lawn parties and limousines were the style; and that was Jay Gatsby's style — casual and smooth and always comfortable.

The HARRADAY shirt in a full rounded collar and turn-back 'Toledo' cuff. Plain shades of powder blue, tan, mint. S.M.L. $10.

Worn with CARAMY'S low scoop neck slim rib Acrylic knit sweater. In light blue, camel, chocolate, black, navy. S.M.L. $9.95

The separate HARRADAY sport shirt has full tapered fit in dashing check patterns and six smooth color combinations. S.M.L. $12.

Winemaking has become so common in Canadian homes that people often swap stories about their latest batch

A tale siphoned down from Georgian Bay about a business executive who left a bottle of red wine to ferment in the basement of his cottage Before his departure he wrapped a plastic garbage bag over the bottle and secured it with string Several weeks later he returned late at night and fell into bed after a tiring drive from Toronto. He was awakened by a noise downstairs so he grabbed a shotgun and went to investigate In the dimly lit basement he saw a huge, hissing hulk in the corner Without giving it a second glance he fired, putting an end to the beast Approaching the flattened creature he found his forgotten homemade wine Escaping carbon dioxide had inflated the garbage bag until it looked like a menacing monster (Grape juice is transformed into wine by the process of fermentation in which the natural sugar present in grapes is converted into equal parts of alcohol and carbon dioxide gas.)

Stories of this ilk are almost as numerous as the 90 different kinds of concentrates available at winemaking stores. Reasons for the advancing interest in this hobby are numerous. A horrified look at rising wine prices in liquor stores has turned a lot of people into ardent winemakers. For example, last week a certain Chablis increased in price from $5.50 to $12

Mel Burns of The Vineyard attributes the spread of wine appreciation to "the influx of immigrants who brought it to the fore " He believes Canadians are more cosmopolitan due to increased travel abroad

Mr. Burns says wine can be made in 18-square-inches of space — just enough room to stand a pail He stresses that winemaking can be as simple or as complicated as you want it

"We have wines that can be put together faster than a cup of coffee he said, comparing it to the purchase of cameras — you can go for an Instamatic or a sophisticated Nikon

A beginner can make five gallons of wine for $18 to $20 A simple kit can be picked up for $12.98 The easiest way is just bashing it all together and bottling it with a fermentation lock. Let it sit, move it to another jar and let it sit a little longer Kits sold make one, three and five gallons of wine with the five-gallon size offering 30 flavors Reds are popular — French, Spanish and Canadian, because people associate wine with red wine

Cleanliness is the most important part of winemaking Some people take the worry out of winemaking by putting their equipment in the electric dishwasher but this is not common

BEERMAKING

The Vineyard also sells liquor extracts and kits and malt and hops extract for beermaking The latter hobby is for impatient people who are out for a quick and inexpensive brew

Mr Burns advises customers to make one batch of wine per month An average concentrate (100 oz can) yields about 26 bottles of wine Monthly cost of ingredients ranges from $6 to $18

Mr Burns points out that winemaking is not for people who list impatience among their seven deadly sins Too often amateur winemakers drink their wine when it is still green. He urges winemakers to put down wine for about nine months without disturbing it

"There may be long periods of thirst when you start making wine but later on you'll have a bash," he said

Veteran winemakers like Mr Burns can provide valuable tidbits of information He can tell you where to join local wine circles — these groups hold winetasting parties and dinners He knows about trips abroad to various chateaux Hard-core winemakers can gain experience and knowledge by visiting vineyards in Europe Travellers usually stay at nearby guest houses while they visit wineries

Two books which Mr Burns recommends are The Art of Making Wine and The Art of Making Beer by Stanley F Anderson

SHERIDAN MALL

If billionaire Howard Hughes landed his jet on the roof of Sheridan Mall it's a bet that he wouldn't be disappointed with our shopping facilities

The ultra-modern shopping centre has 80 individual stores including colorful specialty shops which cater to the rebel as well as the crowd

A wide open shopping centre, Sheridan Mall has a pleasant, controlled environment accented by a floor plan design which reduces your steps and makes movement easier — especially for mothers with young children

Nothing quite like Sheridan Mall has been built before. Careful attention to function and appearance has led to a new kind of shopping centre — one in which the old world open-air market atmosphere lives again but with none of the inconveniences of days before the invention of sliced bread

As shoppers stroll through the mall they can select goods from every country in the world The variety of colorful and cleverly designed boutiques increases your shopping pleasure

Young people tend to meet their friends at Sheridan to share shopping and lunch at one of the many restaurants available

If you have never visited the enclosed two-level mall make it a point to see us soon We have parking for 3 000 cars The mall is located at Highway 401 and Liverpool Road in Pickering with easy access from both Highway 2 or the 401

Store hours are 9:30 a.m to 9 30 p m Monday to Friday and 6 p.m on Saturday Dominion, Family Fair and K Mart are open Saturday to 10 p.m The mall includes an auditorium with banquet facilities

There is an L C.B.O and Brewers Retail conveniently located on the property. This October, Sheridan Mall celebrates their first anniversary

Among winners of Bulova wrist watches were Marie Boucher 140 Kent St., Whitby Doris Matthews, 692 Front Rd., Pickering Mrs. A Nurmi, 92 Gregory Rd., Ajax and the whole Fernandez family of 1895 Glendale Dr , Pickering It proved so popular that organizers plan to hold another next year Watch this column in future for the grand winner of the all-expenses paid trip for two to Acapulco, Freeport, Jamaica or Miami Beach

SQUARE DANCE

Every month Sheridan Mall features a major scale event. The three-day sidewalk sale last month had a western flavor Merchants and sales representatives wore cowboy gear and lassoed shoppers into a variety of bargains. The winding ended with a licensed square dance in the parking lot Around 4,000 people attended the dance and

One of the entrants in the Miss Ontario County Pageant is Karen Green of Ajax

Sheridan Mall would like to take this opportunity to thank all who attended The dance was a great success so much so, that we are looking into the possibilities of holding more events of this type Similar activities are schedules throughout the year to make your shopping more fun

CIVIC

Sheridan Mall remained open on the August 6 civic holiday and many residents took advantage of the day to browse for bargains The Mall will also be open on September 3 which is labor day, a special holiday sale will be held Doors open at 9 30 a m

We try to make your shopping day an event rather than a duty Come into Ontario County's Friendly Market place soon and experience a new dimension in shopping pleasure
